Farley To Keep Post Month; F. D. R. Plans 'Portico Campaign'

Party Chief Will Leave Politics August 17; Roosevelt To Stay Close to Washington Because of War.

By The Associated Press.

CHICAGO, July 19.—James A. Farley, who managed President Roosevelt's 1932 and 1936 campaigns, arranged to leave national politics behind today and turn the direction of Mr. Roosevelt's third effort to win the presidency over to another.

Meanwhile, it became clear that the President would conduct a "portico campaign." There are two of them at the White House, instead of the usual porch. Pressing foreign and domestic problems, it was said, would keep him in Washington and prohibit any extensive campaigning.

Conference Thursday.

The question whether Secretary Henry A. Wallace, Mr. Roosevelt's running mate, would undertake a vigorous schedule of traveling and speaking, in the President's stead, was left to a conference between the two nominees next Thursday in Washington.

A new chairman will be selected to succeed Farley after a conference with the President August 1 by a subcommittee of five headed by Edward J. Flynn, Democratic leader of the Bronx.

Farley told newspapermen after an executive meeting of the national committee today at which he was unanimously re-elected chairman to serve only until August 17, that he would discuss his leaving the cabinet — he is the postmaster general — with the President and that it would be up to Mr. Roosevelt to make that announcement.

Walker Is Favorite.

Authoritative sources have said that President Roosevelt favors Frank C. Walker, of New York, former director of the old National Emergency Council, as Farley's successor. Some of Walker's close friends have predicted he will accept the job.

In a formal statement to reporters "Genial Jim" pledged his "full support" to the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket.

Farley said Democratic campaign headquarters would be opened in the Biltmore hotel, New York. He said he would retain chairmanship of the New York State Democratic committee and would be active in support of the ticket in New York.

Robert Re-elected.

The national committee today re-elected L. W. Robert Jr., secretary; Oliver Quayle, treasurer; and Edwin A. Halsey, sergeant-at-arms.

Meantime, an acceptance speech Wallace had prepared for the convention last night remained undelivered. Because of the lateness of the hour, he explained, he changed previous plans to make the address before the convention adjourned.

Wallace will formally accept the nomination later, probably at ceremonies at Des Moines, Iowa, late this month.

When a reporter asked Wallace what he thought of the opposition which was in evidence against him last night before his nomination, he smiled and said:

"It was a Democratic convention."

Pan-American Defense Plan Seen at Parley

U. S. To Be Asked About Aviation, Purchase of Vital Materials.

HAVANA, Cuba, July 19.—(UP)—Delegates to the Pan-American conference convening here Sunday indicated tonight they anticipate that a general security declaration outlining principles of continental defense will be one result of the meeting.

The delegates felt, however, that any specific commitment of a military character would have to come later because the impending conference is not prepared to act along these lines.

Delegates from the various South American capitals have several questions to ask regarding the United States' plan for defense of the western hemisphere. They are:

1. Could the United States' continental plan be extended to the southernmost countries of South America in an emergency?

2. Will the defense program evolve along lines of predominant air defense which would necessitate widely extended ground privileges or will it revolve around the navy and naval aviation?

3. Will United States assistance for the "economic defense" of the Americas enable large-scale purchases of critical materials—in tungsten, rubber, manganese, fibers—from Latin America instead of from present Far Eastern and European sources?

4. To what extent will the United States grant credit to aid the other republics in developing their respective defensive establishments?

There were indications that the discussion regarding the military relationship among the American nations would await the initiative of the United States.

Some delegates speculated that consideration might be given to establishment of a Pan-American defense commission charged with exploration of the various technical problems confronted in defense of the new world.

Wallace Friendly.

The nomination of United States Secretary of Agriculture Wallace as Democratic candidate for vice president was an outstanding topic of conversation among delegates today. Wallace is considered a friend of Central and South America because of his efforts in behalf of inter-American economic co-operation.

F. D. R. Calls McNutt, Thanks Him for Stand
CHICAGO, July 19.—(AP)—Paul V. McNutt, who dramatically withdrew from the vice-presidential race after receiving a tremendous ovation at the Democratic national convention, celebrated his 49th birthday today and told reporters he probably would "finish out this year" as federal security administrator.

McNutt told newsmen that President Roosevelt had called him by telephone last night after the convention closed.

"Did he thank you?" a reporter asked.

"He did that—and more than that," said McNutt with a smile. He declined to discuss the conversation further.

EVERYBODY'S HAPPY—Although he declares he is determined to quit on August 17, James A. Farley (center) wore a broad grin yesterday when he was re-elected chairman of the Democratic national committee.

by acclamation. Grinning their approval of the selection are L. W. (Chip) Robert Jr. (left), national secretary, and Oliver A. Quayle Jr., national treasurer. Farley pledged his support to the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket.

Tobacco Quota Program Vote Is Slated Today

250,000 Eligible to Ballot on One, Three-Year Plans.

By The Associated Press.
Growers of bright leaf tobacco, already curing a restricted crop for an uncertain market, vote today on the question of extending federal restrictions on tobacco acreage for three more years.

Their ballots will decide the test of a long-range control program aimed at preventing surplus tobacco from glutting markets, with consequent price losses.

Farm officials centered their campaign for approval of federal marketing quotas to be applied to the seasons of 1941, 1942 and 1943, while at the same time offering two other choices:

Quotas for next year only.

Rejection of all quotas.

Upward of 250,000 farmers in North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Florida and Georgia, along with 130 in Alabama, are eligible to vote in the referendum, arranged by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Two-thirds or more of those voting throughout the belt must approve quotas if they are to be applied. It was explained that if neither the one-year nor the three-year plan individually received this majority, but the total vote for the two was more than two-thirds, the one-year plan would be adopted.

As one inducement to approve the three-year plan, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace announced that the 1941 quota would be fixed at 556,000,000 pounds if the marketing restrictions are continued for only one year.

With control assured for three years, he announced, the quota could be fixed at 618,000,000 and still take care of the surplus leaf now crowding the manufacturers.

A production of around 618,000,000 pounds would be about 100,000,000 pounds less than the present world consumption level and would leave acreage about the same as this year, it was pointed out by J. B. Hutson, assistant AAA administrator. Hutson and various farmer committee members have waged an intensive fight for approval of the quotas.

Activity of Georgia Delegates In Convention Most Successful

Rivers Wins Praise for Fight To Include Freight Plank in Platform and for Obtaining 'Bonuses' for Loyal States.

By RALPH MCGILL.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Georgia's delegation headed back home this afternoon after what was a most successful participation in the 1940 Democratic national convention.

Governor Rivers had won much favorable comment from governors and officials from his own and other states for the fight he led which caused the Democratic platform to contain a plank pledging aid to the south in its war against discriminating freight rates.

The Governor also did an outstanding job in gaining for the south and for all Democratic states "bonus" delegates. In this he was almost the only southern governor making a fight. It is not an exaggeration to say the decision to give each state which votes Democratic two extra delegates largely is due to his persistent efforts.

Mrs. Price Named.

At the meeting of the national committee this morning Mrs. Virginia Polhill Price, of Louisville, Georgia's national committeewoman, was named on two of the three committees appointed. One of them is on the committee which must decide the status of the Puerto Rican delegates. This will bring Mrs. Price to Washington for a meeting. The other appointment was on a committee on resolutions.

L. W. (Chip) Robert, Georgia's secretary of the national committee, was re-elected. He was renominated by Governor Rivers and the nomination was seconded by almost every person present.

Farley to Retire.

Jim Farley also was re-elected but later told newspapermen that he would serve as chairman only until August 17 when he will retire to accept an "attractive" private business offer.

He won the hearts of all by his splendid presentation. He said he had to go into business because of his family's future. He promised to retain chairmanship of the New York delegation and to give all he had to the "Roosevelt-Wallace ticket."

The meeting of the national committee was entirely harmonious. The Georgia delegation cast its unit ballot Thursday night for Speaker Bankhead. At a caucus in the afternoon the delegation decided to cast its vote for Secretary Wallace if the Alabama congressman was not before the convention. At this time the word was that only Wallace's name would be placed before the convention.

Delegation Polled.

When Bankhead's name was placed before the convention the delegation again was polled. The majority, and not a big one, was for Bankhead and under the rule all Georgia's votes went for the Alabamian. Most of Bankhead's votes were courtesy votes from southern states.

The Georgia delegation probably was the most faithful attendants at the convention. The party in the state may know that it had a delegation which seriously attended to its duties.

Major Clark Howell, the chairman of the delegation, highly was commended for his able and fair conduct of the caucuses. At all times he and Governor Rivers, national committeeman, made it clear no commitments had been made to anyone except to Mr. Roosevelt and that all delegates should join in the discussion. This was done. The afternoon caucus was very interesting. It was one of the most interesting of political discussions. Many of the delegation members did not care for Wallace but having come here for the President they felt that if Wallace was his choice and Bankhead was not named, then they should vote for Wallace against anyone else. They so voted.

Give Bankhead Votes.

At the convention hall, when Bankhead was nominated, Chairman Howell, under the afternoon agreement, again polled the delegation and the majority voted to give Bankhead the votes on the first ballot.

The Georgia delegation believes that as soon as the Democrats of the state have analyzed the nominations, as soon as they compare

Fuehrer Threatens To Scourge Millions And Destroy Empire

London Scorns Ultimatum With Silence; R. A. F. Planes Raid German Towns; New Commander for Army Named.

By The Associated Press.

Britain scorned Adolf Hitler's peace offer last night as unworthy of reply except in the easily understood language of bomb blast and gunfire.

The German dictator gave point to his threats of total destruction by launching one of the widest and heaviest air raids Britain ever has experienced.

But the Royal Air Force ranged far over Germany and German-subjugated lands to bomb factories and military storage places, including the Krupp plant at Essen, and the royal navy sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean the Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, a 40-knot warship rated as one of the world's fastest.

150 Planes in Battle.

More than 150 German bombers, Messerschmitts and British fighters, were engaged in two air battles off the southeast coast of England yesterday, the air ministry announced.

A communique said "the first big battle took place about noon when nearly 70 German raiders attempted to bomb a convoy."

"In the second action—which took place during the afternoon, more than 50 German bombers and fighters attempted to raid a south coast harbor," it was announced.

"Spitfires, Hurricanes and anti-aircraft guns all helped to beat off the enemy," the communique said. Ten Nazi aircraft, four bombers and six Messerschmitt fighters were destroyed, one by anti-aircraft fire. Many more enemy aircraft were damaged. Five British fighters are missing.

"Scourge Millions."

Hitler gave Britain her "last chance" to escape the fury of the terrible military machine which conquered France and bluntly warned that he would destroy the British empire and scourge "millions" if his final appeal to "reason" was unheeded.

Beleaguered Britain gave the Fuehrer's overture—peace on his own terms—scornful silence. Scarcely had Hitler finished his one hour and 35-minute talk to his reichstag in Berlin than British official sources said it was not worth talking about, that there was no necessity for official reaction.

The British repeatedly have voiced determination to fight Hitler for years if necessary. And they went on without a let-up in preparing for the expected attempt by Hitler to invade England—getting ready to meet it whether it comes in 24 hours or in days or weeks.

Official circles said Hitler's offer was "the same old stuff." The man-in-the-street expressed similar opinions in more truculent language.

French Fleet Answer.

Political sources said they had been expecting a peace ultimatum ever since France surrendered, and that Britain's answer—in ad-

Network Cuts Hitler Talk Off, Says, 'Not in Public Interest'

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—(AP)—Broadcast of Adolf Hitler's address to the reichstag today was cut off by the 31 Pacific coast stations of the Mutual-Don Lee network after the first part had been received.

Lewis Allen Weiss, vice president and general manager of the Don Lee network and vice president of the mutual Broadcasting System, said the following announcement was read from station KHJ:

"The management of this network is of the opinion that it is not in the public interest nor in harmony with the attitude of this government to permit the continuation of this broadcast by Mr. Hitler from Germany."

"We feel sure that our American listeners will concur in our opinion that Mr. Hitler should not be permitted to use our American facilities to justify his crimes against civilization itself."

Two Georgia Men Enlist in Marines

Robert Earnest Farmer, son of Mrs. Grace Ann Farmer, 543 Eighth street, N. W., and Howell Polette Sanders, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Howell Sanders, Route No. 1, Conley, Ga., were enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, it was announced yesterday.

Sergeant John T. Pilcher, of Claville, Ga., who has just joined the Atlanta recruiting office, made the announcement.

The Marines under their present recruiting campaign expect to swell their ranks by 8,000 men.

Savings, Loan Group For Decatur Planned

Six DeKalb county business and professional men yesterday announced their intention of organizing a Federal Savings and Loan Association for Decatur, dependent upon hearing before the Federal Home Loan Bank board in Washington August 26.

Planning to develop the association, which is said to indicate business and financial improvement in Decatur, are Dr. H. G. Ansley, Hugh H. Trotti, Wheat Williams, Frank W. Ansley, Young H. Fraser and John H. Dunaway.

Careless Table Manners May Blast Romance

Lack of Etiquette Causes Boys To Leave Girls.

(Carolyn McKenzie, in her "goings-around" as The Constitution's girl picture reporter, found what may be the answer to "Why boys leave girls." In the following article and the accompanying pictures which Katherine McKie posed for her, Carolyn tells of the horrors which Atlanta's young men expressed to her—after they left their girl friends.)

By CAROLYN MCKENZIE.

Fair lady, take warning and avoid many a heartbreak.

No doubt the subject of numerous college sessions within the alcoves of every sorority house has been:

"Why boys leave girls?"

This answer was probably never clearly derived; but here, fair lady, is the answer—in your etiquette.

According to experts on psychology and etiquette, girls lose more boy friends because of careless table conduct than from any other cause. That seemed to be true, after talking with many jilters throughout Atlanta.

They don't want to date a girl who clinches a grapefruit so tightly the peeling often breaks. Nor do they care to have dinner with a spaghetti "slupper"—those young girls who string tomato sauce coated shoestring-like food far into the air and then with a gulp (or occasionally a "pop") throw the Italian delicacy down their throats.

When a young lady curls her upper lip and bores her pearly-like teeth into egg-battered chicken—beware. The boy friend objects. And we could hardly blame him if we tried out this form of eating before our dressing table mirror.

Poise While Eating.

Atlanta's young men want to date girls who don't lose their poise, charm and grace when choice morsels of vitamins, fats and sugars are placed before them. Of course they are interested in having the dinners eaten; but the damsels need not stage a blitzkrieg before their gallant escorts.

These jilters, who, incidentally, are jam-up on their etiquette, say they are glad that the chicken, the fish, or the hog is not alive to see such frowns and faces made before them.

When a bone or a tough piece of gristle goes into the mouth (accidentally) with a piece of meat, these boys say they can almost tell, from their date's expressions, just what goes on in their mind.

They're wondering:

"Where do I go from here—or how do I go?"

And, the escorts comment, those twists of a mouth, which, in the moonlight, carries great enchantment, make our conversation and our facial expressions cramped—and sometimes amused.

Mouth Full of Food.

"Just suppose an old friend were to step up when she has her mouth crammed full of food. Why the introduction would be impossible," they say.

And so, fair lady, beware of your etiquette and you may keep a long list of suitors.

Incidentally, many young Atlanta girls may undergo the same misery when a would-be escort takes them out to dinner. So their reply to this little observation-interview would run in the nature of:

"So must boys watch their table conduct."

And so, to have and to hold is to watch out for that etiquette.

Your table conduct may cause or avoid many a heartbreak.

Slayer of N. C. Woman Is Hanged in Louisiana

NEW IBERIA, La., July 19.—(AP) Honore Migres, convicted slayer of Mrs. Evelyn Allen Crawford, wife of a North Carolina construction worker, in 1937, died on the gallows shortly after noon today. The execution was performed by a professional executioner whose name was not divulged, and was witnessed by seven official witnesses.

Dr. C. F. Davis Chosen To Head Veterinarians

MOULTREE, Ga., July 19.—(AP) Dr. C. F. Davis, of Thomasville, today had been chosen to head the Georgia Veterinary Association for the next 12 months, succeeding Dr. J. L. Smalley, of Dublin.

Dr. Charles Rife, of Atlanta, was elected vice president, and Dr. J. E. Severin, of Atlanta, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Thomasville was chosen as the convention city for 1941.

WHY BOYS LEAVE GIRLS—Katherine McKie, one of Atlanta's most popular members of the college set, sacrifices her own lovely decorum to illustrate a few of the faux pas which have wrecked romances. The picture at left shows good exercise, but the city's young men prefer not to date spaghetti "sluppers." On the right, Katherine squeezes a grapefruit and is reminded that a girl who does this will never be squeezed.

WRONG, SAY JILTERS—Atlanta escorts complain that their dates too frequently bore their elbows firmly into the table and set about undressing a chicken bone. On the right, Katherine poses a common expression of "Where do I go from here?" Gristle and small bones cause this pandemonium.

Grand Jurors Planning No New Probes

Foreman Says Term Will Be Devoted to Routine Affairs.

The Fulton grand jury does not intend to begin any new investigations outside routine business during this term unless emergencies arise, George S. Foster, foreman, declared yesterday.

He said he had talked with members of the jury and no one had seemed inclined to probe county or city affairs. This grand jury was not charged to investigate county affairs, since two other juries have this specific duty each year.

"We want to look into some of the recommendations of previous juries, as the last grand jury did, and we may bring up some recommendations along these lines in our presentations," Foster asserted.

"It seems to me that things are going along very well down here now, and I personally am not inclined to criticize," the foreman added.

His remarks came yesterday after the jury had returned 21 true bills of indictment and three no-bills in a four-hour session.

Kenneth Frye Hagan, white man, was named in a bill charging he robbed a liquor store at 2905 Peachtree road of $34.31, on July 12, after intimidating Joe Lansing with a pistol.

A Negro, Leon Heard, was indicted on six counts of burglary. He was charged with breaking into the residences of A. P. Suderth, 2205 Essex drive, Cascade Heights; E. H. Preston, 2885 Lenox road; A. S. Colley, 338 East Wesley avenue; Reed Craven, 615 Wilson road; C. L. Gillette, 262

Freight Rates On Livestock Held 'Obsolete'

Atlanta Expert Tells ICC Officials Southern Charges 'Confused.'

Southern livestock freight rates were called "obsolete" and "confused" here yesterday by a rate expert testifying before Interstate Commerce Commission examiners.

E. K. Hart, of the Atlanta freight bureau, said railroads used "obsolete practices" in constructing rates on livestock from the west to the south and east.

He declared neither shippers nor railroads could "show any degree of definiteness determining the lawful rate on livestock moving between the territories." He said this was caused by the manner in which the tariffs now were published.

Hart displayed an exhibit of rates into the south through the lower Mississippi "crossings" at Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans, and showed that "bridge arbitrators" are added in making these rates.

T. C. Maurer, traffic manager of the Jacksonville traffic bureau, testified in support of a complaint filed by Jacksonville, Fla., packers, who asked the ICC to remove "discriminations" against Jacksonville in rates from southwestern points compared with rates from the same points to Moultrie, Tifton and Albany in Georgia.

Nine southeastern states are involved in the general case, which asks parity rates and privileges on livestock shipped within the south, from the west to the south, and from the west to the east via the south. The rates affect carload shipments of cattle, sheep and hogs. Horses and mules are not involved.

Wallace Angle Stirs Talk on Roberts' Race

Georgia Candidate and Secretary Believed To Have Close Ties.

By LUKE GREENE.

There was some discussion in political circles yesterday as to what effect, if any, the nomination of Henry A. Wallace as a running mate for President Roosevelt would have on the gubernatorial campaign of Georgia's commissioner of agriculture, Columbus Roberts.

Roberts lost no time in wiring his congratulations to President Roosevelt. Apparently he was the first of the candidates to extend his congratulations publicly. However, there was no mention of a similar telegram to Wallace.

Worked Together.

Although Georgia cast her votes for Speaker of the House W. B. Bankhead for vice president, it was presumed in some quarters that there must be close ties between Wallace and Roberts, since the two have worked together in their agricultural posts. Furthermore, Wallace not so long ago appointed Roberts a member of an exclusive farm group, it was pointed out.

But even though the two might be the closest of friends, there was still some doubt in the minds of the politicians as to whether the selection of Wallace would be of any benefit to Roberts in his campaign. The commissioner himself was out of town, and none of his lieutenants would go so far as to say how he felt about the vice presidential nominee.

Roberts' telegram to President Roosevelt follows:

"Please accept my congratulations upon your decision to again head the national Democratic ticket, which in my opinion, will be given an overwhelming majority in Georgia, a state that has always gone Democratic."

Measures to Continue.

"Under your leadership Georgia will be assured of the continuance of such constructive measures as rural electrification, old-age pensions, soil-saving plans, guaranteed bank deposits, work for the needy and food for the hungry, all of which would likely be scuttled by a Republican administration, with an eye only to dividends for monopolistic corporations."

Meanwhile, Dewey L. Johnson, president of the Georgia Federation of Labor, announced that the gubernatorial candidates would meet with the executive board of the federation at 10 o'clock this morning at the Ansley hotel to discuss various problems with the labor leaders.

The board is holding a two-day meeting to talk over labor's part in the expanded national defense program.

ABIT NIX OPENS HEADQUARTERS HERE

The Fulton County Club for Abit Nix has opened headquarters at 532 Piedmont hotel with Jere Wells, superintendent of Fulton county schools, temporarily in charge.

Mrs. Clyde Drummond, widely known clubwoman and P-T-A. worker, will serve as hostess and take registrations of visitors and volunteers for service.

"I am for Abit Nix for good government," Wells said in making the announcement. "I believe him to be the outstanding man to serve Georgia during this crisis. He has always supported the Democratic party and co-operated with the national administration, and he will enjoy the hearty support of the federal administration in the conduct of state affairs."

Georgia Mercantile Body Meets Here Thursday

Mother of Baby Placed in Drive Still a Mystery

'Walter Blackman' Thrives at Hospital; Parent Keeps Silent.

No trace was found yesterday of the mother of four-week-old "Walter Blackman," abandoned Wednesday night in the driveway of 2882 Peachtree road.

Scores of telephone calls from women were received at Grady hospital, where the infant was reported thriving, and by juvenile court officials. All callers sought either to see or to adopt the baby.

Mrs. Worth Yankey, of the Peachtree street address, who offered to provide funds so the unknown mother could resume charge of the infant, received no word.

Judge Garland Watkins repeated his assurances of protection if the mother would communicate with him. Some knowledge of young "Walters'" background would help, he said, in finding a home.

The name and the child's age were written on a scrap of paper pinned to its blanket.

HE'S POLITE—Jules Lazard, of New Orleans, La., is one of the guards at the Citizens' Military Training Camp at Fort McPherson. He is polite to feminine visitors.

HE'S KIND—George Dreyfous, businessman trainee from New Orleans in the C. M. T. C. at Fort McPherson, kindly poses on the porch of the barracks. The picture was made by Miss Carolyn McKenzie, Constitution staff photographer, who kept a respectable distance from the "sacred" barracks, which Miss McKenzie and Miss Deezy Scott couldn't "crash" yesterday.

Army Extends No Welcome to Girl Reporters

Feminine Presence in Trainees' Camp Brings Brusque Yells.

By DEEZY SCOTT.

The army is no place for a girl. I found that out when I attempted to visit the Citizens' Military Training Camp, now in its third week at Fort McPherson.

I have never been able to understand the attitude of the soldiers toward me. I was thrown out of a reserve officers' training camp at Fort McPherson several months ago.

A brusque sentry with a gun was guarding the ground, evidently consecrated to masculine use only. They don't ask you politely not to enter, nor do they say the men are sometimes in various stages of undress in the tents or barracks, which you already know and so are looking only for the headquarters; they shout at you, "Girls can't come in here!" The soldier scowls.

A photographer was with me at the contact camp, and his request that I merely be told where the headquarters was and who was in charge, got us exactly two steps farther away from our destination, with the sentry repeating, "Girls can't come in here."

The regular army may have the thing all worked out. It probably sends girl reporters to the downtown area headquarters. But these civilian training courses have not yet reached that advanced stage of efficiency. When, and if, compulsory service makes hundreds of such camps, maybe the reservists will become adept in politely showing ladies about their precious camp grounds.

But, in the meantime—well, take the CMTC. The other day I didn't even have the good fortune of having a male photographer to intervene for me. Our girl photographer and I tackled the camp alone.

A good-hearted fellow newspaper worker who is one of the citizen trainees in the camp was kind enough to have the 21 men from the section of the south in which we were interested at the moment out in front of headquarters when we arrived. So that part was easy. Group pictures and a few general questions. But what about those detailed accounts of the life of the local men at the camp, which the hometown paper has ordered? And what about pictures to illustrate the mattress-turning, bed-making businesses soldiers?

Start for Barracks.—We started toward the barracks, after easily getting our kitchen and dining room angles of the citizen soldiers' activities.

We were escorted by a few of the very nice gentlemen with whom we had been talking. But even thus protected, and only on the path toward the barracks, not directly to them, we were again the objects of yells to "Stop—girls can't come in here."

We weren't "coming in there." We had no desire to enter their secret quarters. We merely wanted some background for Miss Carolyn McKenzie's photographs.

But we were beaten. We don't mind that so much as the attitude, though. We resent the soldiers' superior way of yapping at us. It's probably because he is not really smart about making his bed and keeping his barracks home clean, in spite of the military training.

Help of G-Men Asked in Probe Of Grave Case

Investigators Here Lack Scientific Facilities Necessary to Solution.

Scientific resources of the FBI were sought yesterday in an effort to solve the mysterious invasion of a grave at Loganville July 7, which psychiatrists pronounced definitely a case of "necrophilia," rare in medico-criminal annals.

Solicitor General Henry West, of the western circuit, joined with Attorney General Ellis Arnall in the request to the Federal Department of Justice, in Washington.

"We lack the experts and scientific facilities needed to carry the investigation further," West said.

Although the crime was not a violation of federal statute, it was believed the FBI might enter the case because of its complexity.

Captain A. L. Hutchins, of the state patrol, who took charge of the investigation, said several new leads are being followed.

Mayor Hartsfield yesterday declared Monday as "Memory Day" for commemoration of the 76th anniversary of the Battle of Atlanta.

A Confederate flag will be raised at Five Points at 11 o'clock, the hour the battle began.

Citizen Camps Held Boon for Morale in U.S.

McPherson Training Set-up Pleases War Department, Aide Finds.

Lifting of "national morale" as a direct result of the type of military training camp now being conducted at Fort McPherson has been noted by War Department officials in Washington, W. L. Spencer, Alabama high school educator and state civilian aide, reported here yesterday.

Stopping in Atlanta, en route to his home in Montgomery after a conference Thursday with Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Spencer said the department has under consideration a request from civilian aides throughout the country for an expansion of the special business and professional men's Citizens' Military Training Camps.

Spencer called on Colonel Clifford R. Jones, camp commander at Fort McPherson, and inspected the camp there.

He held a brief conference with Alabama trainees, and carried home a verbal report that they are extremely pleased with the 30-day volunteer training program here.

William K. Nicosi, Montgomery real estate man who attended the first estate camp at Plattsburg, N. Y., in 1916, said he had volunteered for the 1940 camp because of the value of his training 24 years ago.

"We spent 90 days at Plattsburg, and for the first 30 days got about the same training we are undergoing here," he said. "But this is not anything like as tough as it was then for the last 60 days."

Other Alabama trainees are Isaac Forcheimer, Mobile real estate man; Joe Camp Hall, Scottsboro school principal, and James T. Jackson, Dothan lawyer.

Stimson Pleased.—Mr. Stimson and other members of the War Department staff who met with us seemed highly pleased with the conduct of the camps in the various corps areas," Mr. Spencer said. "We asked that such training be made available to other civilians in August, but the army will be busy during that month with maneuvers and other activities already planned. We then suggested such camps be reopened in September, and the request is being studied."

Spencer said much of the value of the training will be in the beneficial effects on national morale after the trainees return to their homes acquainted with the needs and the physical requirements for adequate preparedness.

Public Awakened.—"The American public already is being awakened to our needs," he said. "And we may expect more action in the future where we have been having merely a great deal of talk."

He said the news of training being given in the camps has brought to the front many more civilians anxious and willing to volunteer for military training.

"New York had many more volunteers than were allowed in the quota," he said, "and similar situations developed since camps opened in other sections of the country."

"If it were possible to open another camp, indications are that all of the nine corps areas would have many times the number of volunteers that are training now."

Congress May Move During Repair of Roofs.—WASHINGTON, July 19.—(P)—The senate and house may have to move from their meeting chambers in the capitol for a year.

The roofs are to be repaired, and David Lynn, architect of the capitol, said he would recommend to congressional leaders next week that the senate move to the old supreme court chamber and the house use the caucus room in the house office building until the repairs are completed. He estimated it would take almost a year to do the work.

Avery Opens His Campaign With Dummy

Candidate for Treasurer Has a 'Charlie McCarthy' Making Speeches

By LUKE GREEN.
Tom Watson's statue at the state capitol became the center of another controversy yesterday.

This time it was between Pat Avery, candidate for state treasurer, and his life-size "Charlie McCarthy" of Incumbent George Hamilton.

Four hours after his scheduled take-off, Avery opened his campaign in the shadow of the monument, which recently stirred up a storm of argument over whether Tom Watson was right-handed or left-handed.

Have a Little Fun.
The crowd had a good time. Avery, who says he plans to inject a little fun into his campaign, previously had announced his premiere for noon yesterday.

The time came but there was no Avery. The crowd got impatient and left. Thirty minutes later Avery arrived with his "Charlie McCarthy."

He stood the image up against the Watson statue and hung out a sign saying the opening was postponed until 4 o'clock. His delay, he said, was due to the fact that he stayed up all night getting his "Charlie McCarthy" ready.

When 4 o'clock rolled around the crowd reassembled. They snickered as they watched the antics of the dummy and occasionally laughed out loud.

"First, I'm going to let George make a speech," Avery explained, "and then I'm going to make one. I'm going to let George make this speech all over Georgia."

Record, Speaker.
The "Charlie McCarthy" of Hamilton spoke through a record and loud speaker arrangement. He ended up by saying he was going to play "Marching Through Georgia."

Avery then took the stump. In ringing oratory that made the crowd chuckle, he lambasted his two opponents, Hamilton and Tom Watson. He had one or two hecklers standing here and there.

"The trouble with this Watson is that he wants me to cook the soup and let him eat it," he said. "He wants me to go over Georgia tearing down the Hamilton house and then let him move in by saying he has more experience."

The statue of old Tom Watson himself was scheduled to talk, but the ventriloquist didn't come back. He rushed over to the capitol during the lunch hour, but found the show was postponed. He couldn't wait. He had to get back to his job with a packing establishment.

Motorcycle Officer Injured in Crash
Motorcycle Patrolman Ernest H. Johnson, 31, of 1195 Cahaba drive, was treated yesterday morning at Grady hospital for a broken collar bone, broken right hand and head and body cuts and bruises.

Johnson and his partner, H. T. Jenkins, were patrolling when they beat on Lee street when an automobile driven by Mark W. Mays, 36, of 900 Cherokee street, Marietta, according to police, made a left turn into Arden avenue and Johnson's motorcycle struck the machine.

Both Mays and the injured policeman were charged with reckless driving and having an accident. Trial was set for Wednesday at 4:30 o'clock.

Army Has Vacancies In Streamlined Unit
Vacancies now exist in the army's new streamlined armored division stationed at Fort Benning, according to Captain Terrell C. Wesley, assistant recruiting officer here.

The division includes infantry, field artillery, cavalry, tanks, and medical department. There have been 158 enlistments through the Atlanta recruiting office in July. Also several vacancies exist for clerks in the recruiting service.

Democratic Council of Georgia Has Indorsed No One, He Says.
Ben F. Neal, of Montezuma, executive committee member of the Democratic Council of Georgia, charged gubernatorial candidate Abit Nix last night with "attempting to mislead the loyal Democrats" and insisted that the council had indorsed no candidate in the race.

In a radio address, Neal said each member of the council "will vote his or her convictions."

He said he wanted to make a statement regarding the record of Lawrence Camp, federal district attorney, and the position of the council. Nix, he said, was attempting to "mislead loyal Democrats of this state into the belief that he has never been a New Dealer" or a supporter of President Roosevelt.

Recently members of the council held Nix "unacceptable" for Governor. In replying, Nix charged the council, who organized the council, but who has since resigned, with "a betrayal of Roosevelt liberalism."

Mrs. Josephine Meers, 60, of 666 Julian street, N. W., died yesterday at her residence. Surviving are her husband, S. M. Meers; a daughter, a Mrs. Ingram; and two sons, Walter and Sidney Meers. Funeral arrangements will be announced by J. Allen Couch Funeral Home.

HUBERT JAY MEYERS.

DEBATE CAMPAIGN ISSUES—Pat Avery, candidate for state treasurer, believes in opening his campaign with a laugh. Here he is with his "Charlie McCarthy" of opponent George Hamilton. Both made speeches yesterday afternoon in front of the state capitol. Avery said he planned to "take George all over Georgia with me."

City Donations To Relief Fund Total Only $26

Contributions Smallest of Drive; $16,000 Still Needed.

Atlanta's $100,000 Red Cross war relief drive, which closes its ninth week today, is still $16,000 short of its goal, P. C. McDuffie announced yesterday.

Contributions for the day were the smallest of the drive, McDuffie said as he listed donations of but $26. However, McDuffie reiterated that the drive will continue until the city's quota is reached or as long as the need for funds exists.

The chairman also reported a contribution of $325.51 from the Italian-American Club of Atlanta, which recently disbanded after Italy's entrance into the European war. The money was presented to Dr. Frank K. Boland, chairman of the Atlanta chapter, at a meeting Thursday afternoon. The money represented the balance in the club's treasury at the time of the disbanding.

Following are yesterday's contributions:
Mrs. H. R. Trimble, $5; Landers Plumbing & Heating Company, $10; Julius M. Leonard Jr., $1; Georgia Society U. S. Daughters of 1912, $5; Cascade Garden Club, $5.

Film Presents Vivid Portrayal Of Simple Life

Jungle Heat Fails to Faze Beauty; Popular Detective Returns.

By LEE ROGERS.
Motion Picture Editor.
Never has the movie industry dug deeper into the everyday life of everyday people with more sincere understanding than it did in producing "Our Town," which opened yesterday at Loew's.

It shines brightly in a week in which a majority of the new film offerings are below the Atlanta par—a particularly choice booking on the part of Manager Eddie Pentecost for a picture produced with craftsmanship and in entertaining manner, but one which will not readily catch the fancy of movie-goers unless they have previously read the play, seen the stage production of Thornton Wilder's masterpiece or possibly heard it on the radio theater.

Making the dirty jungle look cool, clean and a place for love, Madeleine Carroll is the bright spot in "Safari," an adventurous love-making match in Africa made worth seeing by the humorous touches lent by Lynne Overman as a Scotch trader.

Nick Carter is on the trail again at the Rialto in "Phantom Raiders," but here again it is the supporting player who boosts the attraction. He is Donald Meek as the "Bee Man."

Still the outstanding show in town is "All This, and Heaven Too," which continues another week at the Fox. It offers Bette Davis at her emotional best.

"Lucky Cisco Kid" is the best action film. The Capitol plays it.

"OUR TOWN" FOLLOWS STAGE PLAY CLOSELY
In conversational manner, following closely in presentation the stage play from which it was taken, "Our Town" is a new and simple story of simple growth, life, gossip, heartbreak and joy in Grover's Corners, which might be any small town in America.

Much the same approach is used as was in the stage play. In the film, there are, of course, setting, but as Frank Craven opens the movie by describing the town as "a stage set," those who have seen both versions will be amazed at the film's ability to create with scenery practically the same imaginary pictures they saw on the barren stage.

With Frank Craven appearing as the druggist, we are conducted on a tour of the town just as the stage audiences were carried by the stage manager (Craven played that). You meet the milk man, the paper boy, the doctor returning home from delivering twins, the housewives getting children off to school.

The scene jumps a few years and the same children are growing up, but life in Grover's Corners goes on much the same. They marry and settle down as parents did. There is seldom a new family name on a gravestone in the city cemetery. High school sweethearts marry, have their children. Parents die. A pretty ordinary sounding story, but a dramatic picture of us as we are—like a reflection of life in a mirror we can't see, or couldn't see before Thornton Wilder captured the atmosphere.

A particularly fine scene is the one in which William Holden and Martha Scott, very embarrassed, first profess their love over a strawberry soda in the village drugstore. Others in the cast—all seemingly lifelong inhabitants of Grover's Corners—are Beulah Bondi, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Guy Kibbee.

To get a young ending, the young wife, Martha, does not die—she merely believes she has joined her kinspeople in the cemetery, somewhat lessening the dramatic effect the play had in trying to awaken people to the joys of life while still alive.

AFRICAN JUNGLES DON'T AFFECT MADELINE.
With hot weather coming, we'd certainly like to have Madeleine Carroll's formula for looking so immaculate under all conditions in the African jungles. We just have finished seeing the unreeling of "Safari" at the Paramount, and Madeleine was grimmer, for a magazine cover at all times.

But be that as it may, "Safari" offers a romance in the jungles between a girl seeking riches and an adventuresome man who makes a living leading safaris, flying planes for China or fighting any war for freedom. He appears sufficiently romantic to win the fair one from her million-dollar meal ticket who was footing bills for the safari after almost losing an arm in the attempt.

Lynne Overman was the highlight of the show. In affected Scottish dialect and in kills he is the trader of the African outpost. His is a masterful injection of humor into a slow moving picture.

Wild-life lovers will find a few interesting animal shots in the film footage.

Paramount News is still editorially for the election of Wendell Willkie. Several weeks ago, he was the subject of their entire newsreel edition. This week his western vacation is highly touted while the Democratic convention is tacked on the tail-end as an afterthought.

DONALD MEER STARS IN "PHANTOM RAIDERS"
Donald Meek, the sour-faced little comedian whose name usually fits his role, improves with every film. His latest is "Phantom Raiders" in which he steals scenes from Walter Pidgeon and Florence Rice.

Donald currently is again the "Bee Man" in a second Nick Carter modernized story. Nick is involved by Donald in an insurance racket case. Ships are being sunk near the Panama canal. When the detective's aid is sought, he is on vacation in Panama. Knowing this and having been offered $5,000 for services, the Bee Man accepts for Nick. Nick, at the time, is interested in a little Spanish dancer, who manages to add gaiety to the film by popping out with English phrases learned from sailors at the funniest times. She knows nothing of their meaning.

The Bee Man arrives in time to catch a gangster and save Nick's reputation from being ruined by a woman. John Carroll and Florence Rice are the lovers. (M-G-M. could afford to do better by Miss Rice. They'd best make her glamorous again before she loses all her fans.)

"LUCKY CISCO KID" AT CAPITOL
Latest adventures of the Cisco Kid, as portrayed by Cesar Romero, continue today at the Capitol in "Lucky Cisco Kid." Plenty of shoot-'em-up for the action lovers and gay romance in the Cisco's love 'em and leave 'em manner for the others.

The Kid is wrongly accused of robbing a stage coach but when about to be hung exposes the judge and his cohorts as the real criminals. The expose is made with the aid of a girl whom the Kid had romanced with.

U. S. Places $20,000,000 Powder Order

Contract Let 10 Months in Advance; Cotton Use Is Cited.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(AP)—Anticipating construction of a $25,000,000 smokeless powder plant intended to triple United States production, the War Department today placed an order for $20,000,000 worth of the explosive, 10 months in advance of the plant's opening.

It also signed its first contract for bi-motored training planes—an undisclosed number of AT-8 planes with two 280-horsepower engines each. The planes will be used by advanced students in transition from light ships to twin-engine service airplanes.

The contract for smokeless powder went to E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, of Wilmington, Del., which contracted with the War Department only this week to build and operate a plant at Charlestown, Ind., near Louisville, Ky., on a fixed fee basis. The plant will employ 5,000 men and have a daily production of 200,000 pounds.

Construction of other powder plants is expected. The army's ultimate objective is believed to be a production of 1,000,000,000 pounds a year, sufficient for a war effort, as compared with 25,000,000 pounds at present.

Smokeless powder actually is a jelly made of nitrated cotton and ether alcohol. It is employed to prevent disclosing the locations of gun batteries.

Ordinance experts believe that the United States, with its recurring cotton surpluses, has ample raw materials for smokeless powder.

Petai Decrees Regarded as Barring Jews

Officials Must Be of Native Birth, First Rule Provides.

ZURICH, July 19.—(UP)—Marschal Henri Philippe Petai's French dictatorship today published two decrees widely interpreted as the start of an anti-Jewish policy while French newspapers asserted that Great Britain faces "an enormous catastrophe" at the hands of Adolf Hitler.

The two new decrees, described as being of "utmost importance to French administration" were published at Vichy in the French official journal. They provide:

1.—That no civil servant may be of foreign birth.

2.—The French naturalization of any non-native citizen may be cancelled at any time.

Generally these decrees are regarded as paving the way for the barring of Jews in France from any public office.

Any functionary of the government whose father was not a native would be considered as having tendered his resignation, the first decree said.

"We are compelled to defend the true forces of our race, our blood and our homes," said the Grenoble newspaper Petit Dauphinois, semi-official voice of the Petai regime, in commenting on the decree.

Official Warns Ireland To Prepare for Worst

DUBLIN, July 19.—(AP)—Minister of Supply Sean Lemass declared tonight, "We must prepare for the worst and prepare quickly," as Eire called for 400,000 more volunteers for the army.

Present army enrollment is about 190,000 for all forces. The regular army's strength approximates 70,000. Soldiers today carried out maneuvers based on resisting invading parachute troops.

Carter Denies Indictment on Army Charges

Captain, Court Martialed in Savannah Case, Seeks Vindication.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(P)—Berlin M. Carter, renewing his 40-year fight for reversal of a court-martial verdict, hopes to convince the senate military affairs committee that the federal courts in Georgia lack a record of an indictment against him.

The 84-year-old former army captain, one-time military attaché at the court of St. James, was convicted for defrauding the government in connection with a Savannah, Ga., harbor project which he supervised as an engineer.

His new move for vindication was disclosed in letters to committee members by James Beckman of Cincinnati, counsel for Carter.

At hearings before a subcommittee, said the letters as made public by Beckman, "War Department representatives laid great stress on their statement that Captain Carter had been indicted in Georgia in connection with the deepening of the harbor at Savannah."

Says Civil Trial Blocked.

"Although admitting that Captain Carter had never been tried on the indictment, they used that admission as proof of Captain Carter's guilt. Captain Carter did everything in his power to force a trial of his case in a civil court, but it was not permitted."

"Now the United States attorney for that district reports that there is no record of an indictment pending against Captain Carter in that district."

"I am attaching a copy of a letter from J. Saxton Daniel, United States attorney for the southern district of Georgia, written to R. O. Daily, of Savannah."

"You will recall that I stated before your committee that we had tried to find out what had become of the indictment against Captain Carter, but had been unable to get any information. Now that information has come."

"The fact is that the War Department representatives misrepresented things so fast that it was hard to catch up with them with the truth, but again in another instance we have done so."

Army's Tactics Flayed.

"Such tactics as have been used by the judge advocate general's department throughout are surely most repugnant to all the fine principles for which the United States stands and on which all its laws are based."

"Captain Carter was 83 on July 11. In view of his advanced age, I hope that his merited vindication will not be long in coming."

Carter wants the committee to approve legislation to void the verdict. A similar bill was approved by the house military affairs committee.

U. S. To Seek Persons Dublin Census Missed

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

DUBLIN, Ga., July 19.—Dublin is going to get an opportunity to prove to census enumerators that there are at least 8,000 persons within the corporate limits of the city, and not just 7,834 as announced in preliminary census reports for 1940.

Mayor D. Sessions announced today that William A. Burns, district supervisor, will be at the city hall Monday morning to contact all persons who were not counted in the first round of enumerators. The mayor said he is confident the census figure will run over 8,000, since he has been contacted by a large number of persons who were not counted.

Georgia Soil Miracles Worked By Former English Professor

Worn Soil of Hillside in Pickens County Turned Into Lush Bale-an-Acre Cotton Fields; Family Makes Farming Pay.

TALKING ROCK, Ga., July 19.—(P)—A Harvard Ph.D. who gave up an English professorship and "turned himself loose in the woods" has become a practical apostle of scientific farming in the rocky, soil-depleted hills of north-east Georgia.

This man of cloistered culture amazed the natives by growing cotton where not even cowpeas would grow before, turning hard clay hillside into loamy cotton fields, hewing logs, building himself a comfortable house and barn.

"I had a lot of ideas I was eager to try," reminisced Dr. E. C. Perrow (Ph.D. Harvard, 1908), one-time professor at the Universities of Wisconsin, Mississippi and Louisville (Ky.).

Now It's Different.

Many a native scoffed at the ideas as impractical for this hilly, rock-laden country. That was 20 years ago. Today they will tell you those ideas have proved far from fanciful and that the college man born in Virginia and now turning 60 is one of the best farmers in this section.

Perrow turned his doctor of philosophy thesis into a new philosophy of rural life that has served as an example to Pickens counties.

A tricky stomach sent him from the classroom. "Get out in the sticks," a physician advised. Perrow bought 500 acres of stumpy-hilled hills. To them he brought his Boston-reared, music-loving wife, two young sons and a daughter.

Perrow knew he should start his farm with "cover crops" of peas and clover to enrich the worn-out soil. But the soil wouldn't grow peas. So he painstakingly cut terraces and built dams to prevent washing.

How It Started.

That started the "cover crops." Now he gets between 50 and 60 bushels of corn per acre from the hillside.

A terrace system carries rain water zig-zagging for more than a mile across a six-acre cornfield. Retention trenches filled with leaves trap rain on slopes, dole it out later to fields below. When the leaves rot they go into fertilizer.

Perrow mixes his own fertilizer. "Most farmers don't know what they are doing when they buy fertilizer in a sack," he said. "Soil in this vicinity has plenty of potash and needs only phosphate and lime." Lime may be obtained cheaply in marble dust at nearby marble quarries.

One of Perrow's original ideas was that farmers tried to cultivate more land than they could handle. He still thinks so. After 20 years, he and his older son cultivate only 80 acres between them. Less than five days' work has been hired on the farm.

Work Together.

The son, Carl, uses two mules. Perrow works a horse. They turn out 10 bales of cotton on 10 acres, a high yield here. Summer and winter they cultivate soil-building clovers and peas, swapping from plot to plot.

Musical-minded Mrs. Perrow keeps up with her music. She also keeps up with 200 chickens, an orchard, many shrubs and household duties. (Carl rigged up a water wheel generator to furnish electricity for the houses.)

In addition to his farming, Perrow has found time for the last decade to be county surveyor. He learned surveying as a hobby while teaching English literature at the University of Louisville. Of it, he says:

"I count as part of progress in the art of living that several new and better roads have followed the trail of my transit, and that I have been able to make peace between more than one pair of contending landowners."

All in all, Perrow admits, he hasn't made much money. But money has little meaning in the scheme of the self-sustaining life he picked for himself in a log house on the soil in the hills.

Job Protection Asked for Men In U. S. Service

Compulsory Training Sacrifice Cited by Arthur Cheatham.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

BUFORD, Ga., July 19.—Passage of laws to protect the jobs of American citizens in the event they are called into compulsory military service was advocated here tonight by Arthur Cheatham, director of the State Veterans' Service office, in an address to American Legionnaires.

"When our men and women are called to the colors in defense of our great nation, I sincerely hope a law will be passed protecting their jobs so they will understand and know they can continue their work on return from their service," he asserted.

He cited Fifth Column activities in France, Belgium, Holland and Norway, declaring "the words truth and honesty have been removed from the German language."

"There is no use of hysteria," he said. "Place America in your heart. If war comes I know you will serve with the same spirit as in 1917 and 1918. I hope this time the issue will be settled so that we can at least have freedom and security and peace for many years to come."

Speaking of taxation for defense, Cheatham said he thought the people of America would be happy to pay for their security.

Gay To Stage Celebration for REA Project

Exercises Will Mark New Lines' Completion; Solons Invited.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

BARNESVILLE, Ga., July 19.—Marking the completion of Project B of the Lamar Electric Membership Corporation, a celebration will be held at Gay Friday, August 2.

Invitations have been extended to Senator Richard B. Russell and Congressman Sidney A. Camp, as well as to officials from REA headquarters in Washington.

Among the REA representatives expected to attend are: Harold Clarke and Miss Thea Wilson, of the utilization division.

Features of the program will include speeches by the honor guests, demonstrations and exhibits, a basket dinner at noon, and a movie, "Bill Howard," which will picture uses for electricity on the typical Georgia farm.

The initial section of the local project was completed in 1938 and was dedicated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Project B, which includes 232 miles of lines and serves approximately 400 members, has just been completed.

The corporation, through its two projects, now boasts 400 miles of lines and about 800 members in the counties of Lamar, Pike, Upson, Spalding, Monroe, Crawford, Meriwether and Bibb. H. L. Smith has served as president of the corporation since its organization.

Blown Down in Storm, Macon Flag Flies Again

MACON, Ga., July 19.—(P)—Firemen of Headquarters Aerial Company this afternoon rehung the city hall flag, installing new ropes.

The emblem blew down in yesterday's wind and rain storm after a weather-beaten rope gave way. The flag fell on the pavement in line of heavy traffic but was rescued before it was damaged.

WHAT'SIT TERRAPIN.

ELBERTON, Ga., July 19.—(P)—H. H. Eustace, of the Gaines district, found a terrapin that's quite snappish, refuses to play dead, and has orange-colored inscriptions on its shell. The letter "E" appears three times on the center of the shell; the figure "9" is written on the left side and the letters "E E E" on the right side. The origin of the inscriptions and the terrapin are causing speculation here.

Old Mill Park Project Soon May Be Revived

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

SPARTA, Ga., July 19.—The Old Mill Park project, which was being sponsored several years ago by the Sparta Lions Club and the State Department of Natural Resources, is expected to be revived with completion of the grading (and possible paving) of the new Sparta-Eatonton highway, local leaders said today.

The park site is located on Shouderbone creek, near Harris Mill. The property was to have been donated by the owners, exclusive of the tract which contains the Indian ceremonial mounds, which was to have been bought with public subscription funds. Many donations were made, but the project was held up due to state financial conditions.

Durden Urges Every Grower To Cast Ballot

Tobacco Quota Program's Value Cited by Roberts.

ATHENS, Ga., July 19.—(P)—AAA Administrator Homer S. Durden tonight called for "every grower to cast his ballot" tomorrow in the bright leaf tobacco referendum to decide the question of marketing quotas for the next three years.

Around 40,000 Georgians are eligible to vote on the three questions—if they want quotas for the next three years; for one year only; or no quotas.

"Every bona fide owner, operator, tenant and sharecropper who shares in the proceeds from the 1940 crop of blue-cured tobacco is eligible to vote," Durden said. He asserted the present situation in respect to tobacco is the most critical in years.

"Supplies are at record peak, and the 1940 crop is adding an estimated 676,000,000 pounds. Authorities believe domestic consumers will not use more than 400,000,000 pounds and because of the war, foreign consumers will be able to take only about 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 pounds. This represents a tremendous cut in export demand."

Polling places in the communities designated by farm committees will remain open until 5 p. m. (using the time standard of the locality.)

ROBERTS URGES GROWERS TO CAST BALLOTS

Georgia bright leaf tobacco growers should go to the polls today and cast their votes on whether a three-year program will be adopted, Columbus Roberts, commissioner of agriculture, asserted yesterday. The election will be held throughout the tobacco belt.

"I have no suggestion as to how the growers should vote," Roberts said, "but I can cite the record. In 1938, under control, Georgia tobacco sold for an average of 20 cents a pound and brought Georgia farmers $18,000,000, while last year the crop, which was not under the control program, brought $12,000,000 and an average of 12 cents a pound."

Because of the war in Europe, Roberts said it was not known what price would be paid for tobacco this year, adding that he understood the buyers for export would not be in the market at all.

Hogansville Bares Prosperous Signs

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

HOGANSVILLE, Ga., July 19.—Hogansville, where preliminary census figures indicated a 10-year population of 3,889, compared with 1,509 in 1930—today was reflecting prosperity as well as growth.

Post office receipts during the first half of 1940 totaled $4,683.85, or 14 per cent over those for the last half of 1939. The office here has attained second-class rank.

Meanwhile, the Hogansville Federal Savings and Loan Association announced payment of a 2 per cent semi-annual dividend to its 121 shareholders. Payments totaled $1,865. The association reported it has not foreclosed on a loan since its organization in February, 1934.

Fayette Honors Grey Veterans, Now All Dead

Dr. Louie D. Newton Is Speaker at Tyrone Exercises.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION.

TYRONE, Ga., July 19.—Fayette county's memories of its Confederate dead grow rather than wane, it was indicated today, when the largest crowd in a half-century thronged Hopewell church here for the county's annual Confederate memorial exercises.

Today's exercises were the first since the Memorial Association was formed 50 years ago that did not have as their central figure one or more soldiers of the Confederacy. Fayette county's last veteran died about five years ago, and each year since, veterans had come from the Confederate Soldiers' Home in Atlanta. Today they were unable to make the trip.

Dr. Louie D. Newton, pastor of Druid Hills Baptist church in Atlanta, who delivered the principal address of the morning, was unanimously invited to return for the next annual program, to be held the third Monday in July, 1941. He spoke today on the theme, "The Truth Never Changes."

Morning and afternoon programs were held, during which recitations, readings and songs were presented by students of Tyrone High school, and music by Mrs. Lone Fambrough. The Rev. Wyatt W. Chandler, of Senoia, was the afternoon speaker. "Dinner on the ground," in old Georgia style, was the order of the noon hour.

R. W. Lester, who presided, was re-elected president of the association, with W. L. Sinchcomb as vice president and W. D. Farr as secretary-treasurer.

4-H CAMP ENDED

DUBLIN, Ga., July 19.—Sixteen Laurens county 4-H club girls tonight concluded their annual four-day camp at Sessions lake with an elaborate candlelight program. Miss Nelle Robinson, county home demonstration agent, was in charge of the camp.

FORMER WAR PRISONER LAUDS ENGLISH CAPTORS.

Editor, Constitution: My personal experience and the experiences of many others testify that the Anglo-Saxon people are the most humanitarian people of the world. They have been more capable than other races to absorb and practice the teachings of the Man of Galilee, who declared, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

In the year 1917 on the 9th of December, I was captured as a prisoner of war by the English soldiers on the Mount of Oliver, Jerusalem. I was interned in the prisoners' camp at Heliopolis, Cairo, Egypt, for six months. There were approximately 45,000 Turkish prisoners of war in this camp. Then and there the humanitarian spirit of the English people was an unbelievable fact. There was a perfect cleanliness in the whole camp. Lice, bugs, flies and fleas were almost out of existence there. Shower baths were common. In one word, the sanitary condition was excellent. Sickness and disease in all forms were rare incidents. Every prisoner was treated by the English as a human being. Such a noble treatment of the defeated enemies by their conquerors surprised them and aroused in them a deep respect towards their victors—the English. England knows how to treat—how to govern and rule, how to educate, enlighten and administer the people under her control. The great humanitarian nation is now forced to struggle between life and death. We Americans must not and cannot afford to let England lose this great war for democracy and human liberty.

NO PASSPORT NEEDED FOR VISITS TO CANADA

Editor, Constitution: In a normal summer season, movement of Americans to Canada for pleasure and vacation is a big factor in the balance of trade between the two countries. It has, in fact, been the largest single item on Canada's side of the balance and consequently has figured very considerably in Canadian plans for financing the cost of war.

The American tourist movement to Canada this summer instead of greatly increasing owing to restricted opportunities for travel elsewhere has fallen far below normal. Accordingly, Canadian business people are turning to their friends in the United States to seek help in adjusting this situation, which seems to be practically entirely due to a condition which, in itself, I believe has some news value.

As you know, the United States has recently made very strict passport regulations for aliens entering the country and this has given a very widespread impression that United States citizens would have to contend with a lot of red tape and difficulties in returning from Canada. The contrary is the fact. United States citizens have no difficulty whatever in returning, nor do they need passports for alien direction. To satisfy United States immigration authorities, all that is needed is some document of identification, club cards, tax bills or similar papers. For the statement, we have the assurance of the chief of the passport division at Washington, as well as personal experience.

Americans can travel in Canada with complete freedom and will find conditions exactly as they were before the war. Prices have not gone up and, in fact, Americans visiting Canada this year will find that their money goes farther than ever.

I hope that you and other American publishers will think it worth while if you can give publicity to these facts to the end that a serious problem for Canada may be lessened and, at the same time, many Americans will not be deprived of an ideal all-year-round playground.

WANTS NATIVE-BORN IN PUBLIC OFFICES.

Editor, Constitution: Today many people are becoming "Fifth Column" conscious. Generally speaking, this term immediately engraves on the brain the picture of an alien engaged in the nefarious pastime of undermining faith in our democratic processes.

While there may be many natural-born citizens whose subversive activities are equally as undermining as that of the alien, the fact remains that blood is thicker than water and other things being equal, an individual having been foreign born and living just a few years in a foreign environment is more likely to subscribe to "isms," particularly if the country of his birth subscribes.

Assuming that the above philosophy qualifies consideration, is it not high time that serious thought be given to making birth in the United States of citizen parents a condition of qualifying for an elective or appointive position that carries with it the responsibility and privilege of policy-making as it affects the behavior of a citizen of the United States?

EVERY ADULT CITIZEN SHOULD PONDER THIS.

Editor, Constitution: Your editorial, "Louisiana Purchase," should be read and thoughtfully pondered by every adult citizen in the country. And the truth in the line, "A nation cannot be composed of free men, ruling themselves, unless all men are honest," should burn itself into the hearts of every voter everywhere. I fear, I very much fear, that unless we return to the religious practice of some of the fundamental virtues (private citizens as well as office holders) our democracy which is barely more than a shell at present, will suffer dissolution.

Editorials of this type should do much to awaken readers to an awareness of the dangerous trend of the times. E. L. THURMAN.

School Bond Vote Planned at Redan

Residents of the Redan school district will go to the polls in a special election August 14, to decide whether or not the community will sponsor an $8,000 school annex bond issue.

Board of trustee officials said the money would be used for the construction of an annex, including an auditorium, the purchase of equipment such as a waterworks, and the purchase of additional property.

The bonds would be dated September 1, and beginning in 1942 would pay 4 per cent interest each July 1. One bond will be retired each year until 1957. Members of the Redan school board are J. B. Phipps, L. P. Bailey and S. D. Bryant.

Central Park Explosion Called 'Childish Prank'

NEW YORK, July 19.—(AP)—Acting Lieutenant James A. Pyke, bomb squad head, dismissed today as "a childish prank" an explosion on the Fifth avenue side of Central Park yesterday afternoon.

The blast apparently was caused by flashlight powder packed into a small metal container, and brought hundreds of persons to the scene. No one was injured.

Good Morning—By Louie D. Newton

Sunday's lesson, the 42nd chapter of the Book of Job, deals with the repentance and restoration, or, as some prefer to say, the inevitable climax of the great drama. We saw in the two previous lessons how Satan challenged the sincerity of Job's trust in God, and how God permitted Satan to sift Job, to bring upon him the sore afflictions of loss of health, loss of wealth, loss of loved ones, loss of friends, and yet, in the midst of his unspeakable suffering, which he could not yet understand, Job declared: "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

It is in Sunday's lesson that we come to the sublime act in this epic drama. Job is talking with God. He says to God:

Buford Holds First Soap Box Contest Today

Winner Will Compete in North Georgia Race July 27.

Young boys at Buford will enter their midget coaster cars in that town's first Soap Box Derby race this afternoon. Staged by the McDonald Chevrolet Company and Buford advertisers, who are co-operating with the Kiwanis Club, the event is expected to draw a large crowd of spectators.

Winner of this race will come to Atlanta July 27 to compete in the state championship race, which is sponsored each year by The Constitution.

Atlanta race activities will open July 22, when the local committee begins checking in and weighing cars and entrants. Plans are completed for the north Georgia meet to be held on North Side drive two block from the Atlanta waterworks. Workmen began preparing the track and grounds this week in order that the boys may have a smooth course.

Department Store Sales Show Gain

Department store sales in Atlanta showed a 6 per cent increase for the week ending July 13 over the previous week and an 8 per cent increase over the corresponding week of 1939, according to a release yesterday at the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

A 7 per cent increase was shown over the four-week period ending July 13 as compared with the same period of 1939.

In the Atlanta district sales for the week ending July 13 were 11 per cent above the previous week and 9 per cent above the same week in 1939. District sales also showed an increase of 6 per cent for the four-week period ending July 13 over the corresponding period of 1939.

Good Morning—By Louie D. Newton

everything, and that no thought can be withheld from Thee . . . I heard of Thee by the hearing of, but now mine eye hath seen Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

The suggestion made by his so-called friends that all this suffering had come upon Job because of some evil he had committed—that God was a Person of retributive vengeance—had never been accepted by Job. Here we have too vast a field of theological discussion for this brief space. Suffice it to say that God's goodness and mercy were fully vindicated in the ordeal which He permitted Job to suffer, which Job himself quite fully and frankly declares.

It was when Job began praying for his unworthy friends that the tide was turned. Job confessed his helplessness, his ignorance, his unworthiness. This is one of the most revealing examples of prayer given in the Bible. The golden text for the lesson Sunday states it finally in these words:

"The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends."

God heard Job as He had promised. He makes the same promise to all who will come unto Him in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, willing to ask, "Not my will, but Thine be done." We are again reminded that prayer releases and restores—that men of prayer are men of power.

"Lord, teach us to pray." We shall be able to meet every problem of these trying, testing days—days of affliction, if you please—if only we are willing to put ourselves wholly in the hands of the Lord, as did Job. Prayer is the heartbeat work in this world—the work which pays the biggest wages.

Schools Given Final Payment Of $393,242.75

State Issues Funds After Bibb Litigation Is Dismissed.

The state began sending out yesterday $393,242.75 as final payment to county and municipal school systems on the 1939-40 school appropriation, which had been held up by legal technicalities.

The funds were released by a decision of the state supreme court, denying a rehearing to the Bibb county board of education, which had contested the method of determining payments.

This payment brought total funds provided for schools by the state in the past fiscal year for teachers' salaries and maintenance to $9,637,000. It provided for a total of six months and one week of teachers' salaries.

Here are the amounts to be received by school systems in this area: Fulton county, $12,117.70; DeKalb county, $5,127.75; Atlanta, $21,960.30; and Decatur, $1,381.19.

The final payment was withheld when Bibb county brought a second motion for rehearing of the supreme court's decision that all school systems in the state must be paid on a teacher unit plan. Bibb, Chatham and Richmond counties had contended they were entitled to payment under local acts which provided for a pupil-census plan.

J. Jack Allman, superintendent of school administration, said that the three counties had claims totaling $329,000 on the basis of their contentions, and because of the motion before the supreme court sufficient funds had been withheld from the entire state system to cover this.

He pointed out the final payment, although completing the full appropriation made by the legislature, did not make payment for a seven-month school term. He said the state was approximately $1,800,000 short of making a full seven-month school term payment, but several counties closed down their schools at the end of six months.

Poll Shows 51 Per Cent Approves Republican Nominee, 49 Per Cent Prefers Roosevelt in Pivotal 'Home' Area.

PRINCETON, N. J., July 19.—Wendell Willkie, the Republican nominee, has a slight lead over President Roosevelt in the returns from a new survey of New York state—home state of both candidates—which has just been completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

While it is still too early to determine the outcome in New York next November, the Institute's first measurement of sentiment since

Mr. Willkie's nomination—but prior to the Democratic nomination at Chicago—shows Willkie has gotten off to a head-start in the state.

Magnitude of the concentration of some 70,000 United States army troops for war games on the Louisiana-Texas border August 4-24 was disclosed yesterday with the announcement that troops in the maneuvers will come from every state in the Fourth and Eighth Corps Areas. The maneuvers will be directed by Lieutenant General S. D. Embick.

Texas leads the list with 15,000 regular army and 11,000 National Guardsmen assigned to the games.

The Fourth Corps will contribute as follows: Louisiana, 2,500 guardsmen; Mississippi, 3,000 guardsmen; Georgia, 3,000 regular army and 3,000 guardsmen; Florida, 2,500 guardsmen; Tennessee, 3,000 guardsmen; North Carolina, 1,200 regular army and 3,000 guards-

Fourth Corps Area headquarters earlier this week announced that the Georgia guardsmen would be stationed at Camp Shelby at Hattiesburg, Miss., before moving into Louisiana for the war games.

Adjutant General John E. Stoddard will be in command of the Georgia force, and the guard units assigned to the maneuvers include:

One Hundred Seventy-ninth Field Artillery, Atlanta; 108 Cavalry, Atlanta; Savannah and Hinesville; 118th Field Artillery, Savannah and Waynesboro; 105th Medical Regiment, Atlanta, and 121st infantry, headquartered at Macon and with companies at Jackson, Waycross, Brunswick, Valdosta, Albany, Thomasville, Cordele, Dublin, Hawkinsville, Bainbridge and Barnesville.

Atlanta Public Debt Is Placed At $13,686,000

Per Capita Indebtedness Held Very Low for City's Size.

Atlanta's public debt was placed yesterday at $13,686,000, about $45.50 per capita, by Lawrence James, assistant city comptroller.

Of the total, $12,026,000 is in outstanding bonds for sewers, schools, the newly constructed city hall and the waterworks; $610,000 is in debt fund certificates issued to retire the city deficit made during depression years and expended mainly for relief; $500,000 for waterworks improvements and another $550,000 for a new city incinerator.

A year ago, the public debt was listed at $13,821,500, and two years ago it was $15,051,600, James figures showed.

To offset the total indebtedness, however, James said $1,517,395 is in bond sinking fund accounts, and only $347,000 of this amount is necessary to retire bonds due this month.

The per capita bonded debt owed by Atlantans is regarded as one of the lowest among cities of comparable size in the country, and Atlanta bonds stand at the very top of the list among other cities of the nation.

Uncle Putnam plays softball with the boys

UNCLE Putnam couldn't be called an unqualified asset to the team. When he gets up to bat and takes a swing you'd think he was trying to blast out of a trap with a sand wedge. His hits are limited to doubles because he can't run farther than second base without sitting down to rest. His fielding recalls a cigar-store Indian.

Nevertheless, the boys like to have Uncle Putnam in the game. For one thing, it's hard to get up a team. For another, it's handy to have him around when somebody socks the ball through a neighboring window.

Uncle Putnam's interest in softball developed almost overnight. He used to get home from work in the afternoon too tired for anything but a chair on the side porch. That was when he drove his automobile to work.

Since changing to street cars he's been a different man. He gets home fresh and rested, pulling off his coat to get in the game as he reaches the front steps.

The boys didn't think so much of it at first, but they found out he has his uses—buying new equipment for instance. Uncle Putnam pays for it out of what he saves by leaving his automobile at home.

Arnold Meets Jennings Gordon in Finals of State Tourney

Barnes Loses Close Match On 18th Hole

Macon Youngster Trips Zimmerman and Mulherin.

By AL SHARP.
IDLE HOUR COUNTRY CLUB, MACON, Ga., July 19.—Jennings Gordon, 31-year-old Rome player, and Arnold Blum, 18, of Macon, advanced to the finals of the Georgia state amateur golf tournament here this afternoon. They will meet in the 36-hole finals tomorrow.

Blum shot the best golf to survive the only "sudden death" day of the tourney by beating Bill Zimmerman and Frank Mulherin, both former champions from Augusta.

The hometown favorite was one over par when he halted Zimmerman in the morning 2 and 1, and he registered the same score in the afternoon as Mulherin bowed, 3 and 2.

BARNES' RALLY SHORT.
Gordon was 9 over par for the day, being 4 over to beat Dynamite Goodloe, of Valdosta, 2 and 1, in the morning. He turned back Tommy Barnes, only Atlanta left in the championship flight, 1 up, to gain the finals.

Barnes made a fine comeback after being down to a par 35 on the front nine.

Still three down through the 12th hole, Barnes won two in a row to be one down going to No. 15. He halved the 15th. Then Barnes missed an eight-inch putt for a half on the 16th. That put him two down.

Although he won the 17th with a par, he could do no better than a half on the last hole.

Barnes' putter threw him flat this afternoon. He three-putted for the first time he has been here at the 17th hole. That cost him a win when he was one down. Then he three-putted the 9th to go three down after Jennings sank a 11-foot birdie on the eighth. Missing the eight-inch putt on the 16th climaxed the exhibition of bad putting.

MACON, Ga., July 19.—Red Roberts, of Dalton, scored a hole-in-one at the 12th here this afternoon while beating Dan Gotsman, of Atlanta, 2 and 1, in a second-flight match. Hit with a No. 6 iron, the ball dropped about a foot in front of the cup and trickled in. The hole is 164 yards long. It was Roberts' third ace.

TWO BIRDS ON FRONT.
But give Gordon plenty of credit for turning that front side in par. He had two birdies on that stretch and was hitting the ball well. Both were off on the back side, Gordon taking a 40 to Tommy's 38.

Blum gained the edge on Mulherin with his fine shooting on the front side, being 1 under par and four up at the turn. He was two over par the rest of the way, but that was enough after he gained such a long lead.

Barnes beat Dan Yates, the defending champion, 4 and 3, in the morning after getting off to a big lead with a 1-under-par 34. He went one over par on the rest of the holes after chalking up the early advantage.

Mulherin reached the semi-finals by beating Jack Slayton, of Columbus, 5 and 3, in the other morning match. Three under par on the first nine, Mulherin breezed to victory after that fine shot-making. He was one under par when the match was completed.

Jenkins Signs To Meet Hank In September

Return Bout Billed After Row Over Held-Up Purse.

NEW YORK, July 19.—(UP)—In a maneuver that amazed Leatherstock Lane, Promoter Mike Jacobs today matched Lightweight Champion Lew Jenkins and Welterweight Champion Henry Armstrong for a return nontitle 12-round bout at Madison Square Garden on September 27.

This match was unexpected by the boxing fraternity because only Wednesday night Armstrong had knocked out Jenkins in the sixth round at the Polo Grounds.

Moreover, the match was announced little more than an hour after managers of Jenkins and Armstrong had appeared at a stormy session of the boxing commission and given written assurance that both fighters would defend their respective titles in New York state within the next four months.

To bind these title defenses in the Empire State Jenkins and Armstrong posted forfeits of $1,500 and $2,000 each with Promoter Mike Jacobs, who will file the forfeits with the commission.

The commission had held up both champions' purses from Wednesday's battle until today's forfeits were posted, thus forcing them to keep defense assurances made in May, or lose the forfeits.

Amateur Ball

One of the most important days of the entire season is on in the Scott League this weekend, with National Biscuit and Southern Railway slated to lock horns in a double-header at Fort McPherson. The Biscuits won the first half pennant, and this twin bill is quite apt to decide the winner of the second half.

Meanwhile Riverdale, upset winner over the Biscuits by a 1-0-0 score a few weeks ago, has a good chance to grab possession of the leadership by trimming the strong Oakland City nine in their engagement at Oakland City.

Milledale's rejuvenated nine will have a chance to smear the undefeated and league-leading Fulton Bag team in their city Textile League set-to on the Fulton Bag field. Whittier's joust with Clarkdale on the latter's grounds likewise should be a hectic encounter.

The well-balanced, anything-can-happen Atlanta loop has three stiff engagements on the docket, with Hapeville and Fickett, Brown, tied for the first-half pennant, meeting in the feature. The Fulton Bees, league surprise package, takes on the Ansley Hotel, and the State Highwaymen will attempt to take the starch out of the Arrow Shirts.

Courts and Boland Clash In Finals of City Tourney

Gladys Atkinson Battles Mrs. David Jones for Women's Singles Championship.

By CAROLYN MATTHEWS.
Macon Courts and Dr. Kells Boland, Atlanta veterans of the clay courts, will clash this afternoon in the finals of the annual city tennis tournament at the Northside courts. Courts will be defending the title he won last year and will rule as a slight favorite to repeat.

Settlement of the singles championship will begin at 2 o'clock, and will climax a tournament that has been harassed all the way by steady downpours which stretched this annual courts classic over nearly two weeks.

Courts marched into the finals with an easy 6-1, 6-1 verdict over Red Hill, while Boland was pushed to dispose of Campbell Gillespie in two sets, 8-6, 6-0.

The men's finals will be one of five events.

In the junior division Carl Maddox and Paul Sudan will meet in a match that also begins at 2 o'clock. Sudan, a dark horse, bounded into the finals after scoring upset victory over Archie Reagan early in the tournament.

Mrs. David Jones and Mrs. Gladys Atkinson, first and second seeded, in that order, hook up in a battle for the women's crown, beginning at 4 o'clock.

Courts will team with Red Hill against Charles Rice and Cortez Suttles in the men's doubles finals. The Rice-Suttles team crossed the critics yesterday with a straight-set decision over J. T. Chambers and Red Enloe, veteran tandem.

Hill and Courts coasted on a default over Boland and Billy Grant. Grant pulled out for an eastern tournament when he and his partner were leading, 5-4, in the third set.

Mixed doubles will begin at 6 o'clock, with Atkinson-Enloe clashing with the Camp-Suttles team.

Self Defeated In Mid-Atlantic.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 19.—(AP)—Louis Faquin, of Memphis, Tenn., advanced today to the finals of the men's singles in the mid-Atlantic tennis tournament here.

Faquin beat Billy Farmer, of Tampa, Fla., 6-4, 6-4 in the semi-finals this afternoon after eliminating Eddie Seife, of Atlanta, Ga., 6-4, 6-3 in the morning round.

Lookouts Obtain Tallasse Slugger

TALLASSEE, Ala., July 19.—(AP) The Alabama State League is losing its most sensational player, Gordon "Cotton" Goodell, outfielder who already has hit 31 home runs this season and has a batting average of .330.

The Tallassee front office announced sale of Goodell and Jim Persons, shortstop, to the Chattanooga club, of the Southern Association.

Until last week, Goodell had held his batting average above .400 for the season. He will report to the Lookouts August 1, while Persons is expected to play out the season with Tallassee. The infielder has a batting average well over .300.

Tampa University To Keep Football

TAMPA, Fla., July 19.—(UP)—University of Tampa will tread the gridiron as usual this fall, despite previous reports that football might be dropped at the school, officials of the Spartan Quarterback Club said today.

Nearly 150 members of the club have pledged sufficient funds to maintain the team. Inter-state games have been weeded from the schedule, and the Spartans will meet teams from six Florida colleges.

Ferrier's 66 Ties Mark in Chicago Open

Tumesa and Metz Trail Australians 2 Stakes in 1st Round.

CHICAGO, July 19.—(UP)—James Ferrier, Sydney, Australia, carded a 66—six under par—tying the record for the Tam O'Shanter course in the opening round of the $5,000 Chicago open golf tournament today.

He paired a 34 with a 32 to set the pace for some of the nation's top golfers, including Tommy Armour, Johnny Revolta, Jim Foulis and Harry Adams, all of Chicago; Gene Sarazen, of Connecticut; Johnny Revolta, Evanston, Ill.; Lawson Little, national open-king, and Harry Cooper.

Ferrier, who was defeated in the semi-finals of the western amateur championships at Minneapolis last week by George Victor, of Chicago, was two under par going out and four under coming in. He scored seven birdies and dropped odds of 10, 12, 15, 30 and 45 feet.

Willie Turnesa, Elmsford, N. Y., trailed Ferrier with a 34-34-68, and Dick Metz, Oak Park, Ill., also carded a 68.

Mioland Runs Without Pollard

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—(AP)—Mioland's stock in the Hollywood Derby dropped as an even dozen entries were made for the third running of the $25,000 summer special at Hollywood park tomorrow.

The Howard star probably will be the public's fancy in the mile-and-one-quarter race, however, against a field slated to include: Sweepie, winner of the $50,000 Santa Anita Derby February 22; Wood Wood, winner of the Flamingo Stakes at Hialeah last winter; Weigh Anchor, Royal Crusader, Big Ben, Big Flash, Son of War, Enthral, Tactician, Wee Toney and Bachelor Tom.

PALATKA, Fla., July 19.—(AP)—Bill Turner, professional at Macon's Cherokee Golf Club, took off enough time from his fishing vacation to sink a hole-in-one on the 175-yard twelfth here.

Sharp SHOOTIN'

NEW GOLF LANGUAGE SPREADS FAST.

IDLE HOUR COUNTRY CLUB, MACON, Ga., July 19.—Dewey Bowen walked into the clubhouse.

"How did you do?" asked Bill Bentley.

"I was walking along cutting him like a fruit cake, but he started healing fast. So I decided to stomp him like a cream puff."

"You mean you beat him 5 and 3," volunteered Slim Bowden.

"That's the sum and substance of the situation," said Gus King.

"I've been out firing 'em up a bit myself. I was wandering along with my satchel full of sticks when the party got rough, so I had to stick my neck out."

"Yes, I knocked him out."

"Who do you play this afternoon? Well, that doesn't make a difference."

"Bothamley. 'I'll just bet you don't win.'"

"You want to bet a bale or a chunk? Say, how much did you bring with you?"

"Better watch that wallet of yours," warned Hubert Surratt. "You'll get it unbuckled and all that lettuce will fall out."

"He'll have to get up early and be waiting on the first tee before he unbuckles me." "Aw, I'll put you in the sausage grinder and chop your head off."

"Ralph McClelland Jr. walked up."

"No, I didn't get unraveled, but I came close before I started firing 'em up.'"

"That is a small sample of what we have been listening to around here all week."

"You can't put down on paper the singsong manner in which the odd expressions are delivered."

"That puts a lot of life in them, though."

"They are not as monotonous as they sound."

"The Druid Hills gang brought the expressions to Macon. Now every one uses them."

"You can have a good time listening to them and figuring out what is going on."

"It isn't hard to do after a while."

Willkie Queries Cattlemen in 'Beautiful' Chat

Candidate Says He's Lived With People, Knows Problems.

DENVER, July 19.—(AP)—Wendell L. Willkie questioned livestock men on cattle and sheep economics at an informal conference today, then left on an auto tour of the northern Colorado sugar beet area.

The Republican presidential nominee said his meeting with the livestock growers was a "beautiful conference."

Afterwards he told a crowd at Union stockyards that "if you elect me president you will have one who understands the problems of the American people because I've lived with them and know them."

Meanwhile Willkie's son, C. Cobb and Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion in 1938-39, pledged support to Willkie.

'Just Floating...' Voice-in-Sky Informs Spy-Conscious Citizens

LAKEHURST, N. J., July 19.—(UP)—Four naval officers drifting over the New York and Connecticut countryside in a "dusk-to-dawn" balloon training flight kept state police and those of 36 communities in a state of nervous alert during a night filled with apprehensive reports from spy-conscious residents of the area.

There was, for instance, the pardonable amazement of Gus Durham, a Briarcliff Manor resident who was walking home at 3 in the morning when he heard voices just over his head. Then a light flashed down on him from the sky. He blinked at the light and saw a balloon, its basket just 40 feet over his head.

"Are you in trouble?" he inquired.

"No trouble," an aeronaut replied nonchalantly. "Just floating around."

Then the balloon rose suddenly out of sight. Durham, not quite sure of anything, ran to police headquarters, where Patrolman Frederick Borho was inclined to recommend a soothing cup of hot milk and a good night's sleep.

Howard Seeks To Raise Tax Value of Plant

Demands Reassessment of Atlanta Terra Cotta Company's Property.

A demand for Guy A. Moore, county tax receiver, to revalue the tax assessment on the property of the Atlanta Terra Cotta Company in East Point was made yesterday by G. H. Howard Sr., former Fulton superior court judge, who recently has represented a group of citizens in an effort to increase tax assessments against Atlanta private clubs.

William C. Henson, of the firm of Howard, Henson & Howard, declared in a letter to Moore that the real estate of the terra cotta company is worth at least $150,000, but that it was assessed in 1939 at only $5,000. He charged that the machinery and equipment of the company could not be duplicated for less than $500,000.

The tax books show the company assessed from 1933 through 1939 at a total valuation of from $13,500 to $20,000, Henson pointed out.

The lawyer asserted that unless Moore notified the terra cotta company to revalue its property within 10 days Howard would file a mandamus petition against him. The East Point plant of the company was investigated by tax assessors a few years ago, and the assessments were reduced because the plant was not in operation and virtually abandoned, Comer H. Davis, chairman of the board of tax assessors, said after Moore received Henson's letter.

Everything is affected by the heat wave except the want ad RESULTS in The Constitution.

Textile Worker Still in Jail as Peek Witness

Alvin Pitts' Testimony Desired for Trial of Chappell, Others.

Alvin Pitts, Villa Rica textile worker, will remain in the Cobb county jail at Marietta until called as a material witness at the trial of Bill Chappell and three others under indictment on murder charges in connection with the deaths of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ed Peek, of Atlanta, it was disclosed yesterday by Sheriff George McMillan, of Cobb county.

Pitts, who has been held by police since the revived investigation of the slaying began more than six weeks ago, did not appear as a witness Thursday before the Cobb grand jury, which returned indictments against young Chappell, son of Carroll County Commissioner W. Hamp Chappell; Jason Clark and Lewis Turner, former Carroll county convicts; and John Holmsbach, 68, inmate of the Carroll county almshouse.

Commissioner Chappell visited his son at the Cobb county jail yesterday, accompanied by another son. The elder Chappell declined comment.

Solicitor Grady Vandiviere also announced that, should defense counsel desire a severance, young Chappell will be the first to be tried. Sheriff McMillan said the trials would start July 29. It was rumored Chappell's counsel in Carrollton would handle the defense for the entire group.

Sheriff McMillan and Cobb County Patrolman Esmer Ward, both active in the inquiry into the deaths of the Peeks, will be major prosecution witnesses. The battered bodies of the Peeks were found near their wrecked automobile at the bottom of a deep railroad cut on the Austell-Marietta road June 21, 1938.

State Delegates Are Successful At Convention

Wallace and McNary, as soon as they recall that Wallace has produced the stamp plan, has given the farmers benefits comparable with those industry has received in the form of commodities, that he has inaugurated the soil conservation plan, and that he is an able, intelligent, splendid gentleman, many of the objections will disappear.

If he succeeds in obtaining parity prices for the farmers this summer and fall his popularity will increase.

The Georgia delegation, feeling it has done its honest best in representing the party, left on the 3:30 train and will arrive in Atlanta at 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning.

One group took a plane. With them was Cecil Crenshaw, who never before had been on a plane. Also on the plane were Mrs. Clem Rainey, Mrs. Juddie Johnson, Jack Boone and Fred Collier. All were pledged to hold Mr. Cannon in the plane should he at any time express a desire to quit it, on the basis he didn't like the delegation ever will forget this most historic of all conventions. Especially will the drama of Wednesday and Thursday evenings be memories lasting as long as life.

Talmadge explained that because of an operation he would have to forego his "desire to visit every county and see all my old friends and shake hands with them."

Miss Aiken and Mr. Gibson Wed at Evening Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Bette Blue Aiken, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David H. Aiken, and Dr. J. Clyde Gibson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse C. Gibson, was solemnized last evening at 7 o'clock at the Peachtree Road Presbyterian church.

Rev. H. E. Russell performed the ceremony and a program of music was presented by Mrs. J. Clarence Mathews, organist, and Mrs. D. H. McFarland, vocalist.

The altar of the church was banked with palms and ferns flanked by standards filled with pink and white gladioli. Altar baskets filled with Easter lilies and calla lilies, and candelabra holding burning white tapers completed the decorations.

Ushers were Roy Robertson and Jimmy Kilpatrick.

Miss Evelyn E. Hayes, of Macon, was maid of honor. She was gown in pale pink marquisette designed with a tight-fitting bodice and full-flowing skirt. She carried a bouquet of pink and white roses.

Misses Charlotte and Pat Parker, bridesmaids, wore rose marquisette fashioned with boleros and full-flowing skirts. They carried bouquets of pastel summer flowers and they wore small hats covered with rose flowers.

The lovely bride entered with her father, by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Alton Fowler, of Macon. The bride was gown in ice-blue satin designed with a fitted bodice and sweetheart neckline. The full-flowing skirt, which was gathered at the waistline, featured a long train, and her fingertip veil of ice-blue illusion was caught to her head with a coronet of valley lilies. She carried a bouquet of Easter lilies and valley lilies centered with a purple-throated orchid. Her only ornament was a string of pearls, a gift of the groom.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Aiken entertained at a reception at their home on Peachtree avenue.

Mrs. Aiken received her guests wearing a gown of rose marquisette posed over matching taffeta and a shoulder spray of white orchids. Completing her costume was a small hat fashioned of rose flowers.

Mrs. Gibson chose for her son's wedding a gown of rose lace, with which she wore matching accessories and a shoulder bouquet of white orchids.

The hosts were assisted in entertaining by Misses Charlotte Parker, Pat Parker, Elizabeth Travis and Mrs. Philip Jackson.

A profusion of Easter lilies, calla lilies and white gladioli were effectively used throughout the house, and the bride's table was overlaid with a Venetian embroidered cloth centered with a tiered wedding cake surrounded with valley lilies.

Mr. Gibson and his bride left for a wedding trip to Jacksonville Beach and Daytona Beach, Fla., and upon their return they will reside in North Carolina, where Dr. Gibson is affiliated with the North Carolina state board of health.

The bride chose for traveling a beige crepe redingote trimmed with starched white lace. White accessories and a shoulder spray of purple-throated white orchids completed her costume.

Among out-of-town guests attending the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. Ben Fong, Alton Fowler, Miss Evelyn E. Hayes, Mrs. Rex Harrell, all of Macon; Miss Myrtle Hurley, aunt of the groom, and Mrs. Jesse C. Gibson, of Gibson, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Julian S. Harper, of Birmingham, Ala.; Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Bush, of New York city, and Mrs. D. Boyd Humphrey Jr., of Lumberton, N. C.

Big Pocket Mode Here For While, Says Designer

By Sheila Graham.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., July 19.—How about the fashion future for the broad-shouldered silhouette and big pocket modes? Both will continue according to Orry Kelly, dress designer at Warner Brothers' studio.

"Women like to plunge their hands into deep, roomy pockets and get a real lift from all pockets of whimsical shape," says Orry. "And they will definitely not give up the wide shoulder without a struggle, since it is so flattering to the figure, slimming waists, hips and even chins by contrast."

Here are some gowns designed by Mr. Kelly for Rosalind Russell in "No Time for Comedy"—a bouffant evening gown with its skirt a billow of white ostrich, the bodice featuring a little pelerine of plumes that widen the shoulders.

A white broadcloth dinner gown, with gold belt and tailored revers, has wide and squared shoulders. A fuchsia crepe gown has an extravagance of tufted matching satin embroidered in cabochons, beads and pearls in epaulettes. Pockets are important on Rosalind's blue broadcloth suit. A scarlet satin house robe, straw with infinitesimal white flowers, shows broad revers and enormous pockets.

Joan Blondell wears some fetching numbers in "I Want a Divorce" (in which she does a good job of quarrelling with husband Dick Powell). The inevitable black crepe dress gets a new highlight—a splash of pink angora yard embroidery at one side of the V-neckline. This eliminates the necessity for jewelry accents. The dress has a short, full skirt and wide elbow-length sleeves. Her gauntlet gloves are in pink suede. Her hat is a shiny straw turban, with a big bow of straw—to add height. Pumps and pouch bag are in shiny black patent leather.

Miss Blondell also wears a three-piece suit which has a flaring, short skirt of thin black wool with a wide, attached self-belt; a buttoned bolero of raspberry-colored wool with bracelet-length sleeves. To go over all this is a swaggy topcoat of raspberry wool, lined in black crepe. Joan's hat is an off-face black felt Breton sailor with bands of raspberry grosgrain around the crown. Her accessories are black.

And there's a smart leather-tan suit worn by Joan. Designed by Edith Heath, the three-piece suit here has a slightly flared skirt, zippered, finger-top jacket and hand-wrought bronze buttons. The revers on the jacket are faced with tan and white dotted crepe and the "great coat," which goes over all, is lined with this print. Joan's sailor shot is tan felt, held to her head by a snood of the printed crepe. Her accessories are tan calf-skin.

Virginia Dale, Paramount player, owns a new type of white linen with a shantung weave. The full, circular skirt fades up into a fitted waistline with a backless bodice. There's a separate bolero with short sleeves and an appliqued monogram in brilliant blue. The same monogram detail is used on a single pocket at one side of the skirt.

Dorothy Lamour made quite an entrance the other p. m. at a party given by Mrs. Edward Robinson. Dorothy's dress of silk jersey was in a stylish zigzag print of brown and white, over which she wore a chocolate brown silk jersey coat. A back draped turban showed a glimpse of the zigzag print of the dress. Her ear-clips were gold seashells with a single diamond in the center of each. Completing the outfit, Miss Lamour wore brown kid pumps with carved wooden heels and carried a brown kid envelope bag and brown doe-skin gloves.

Dining at the Derby House of the Beverly Hills Brown Derby, Constance Moore wore a navy and green crepe dress with a wrap-around skirt featuring side-saddle draping, the side-draping repeated in the blouse and short sleeves. Her hat, the new Schiaparelli cap, worn far back on the head, of navy felt. From a green grosgrain front bowknot jutted a cluster of red roses and green leaves that drooped low, covering the forehead.

DRESS PARADE—Perky, crisp white pique creates this veiled sailor worn by Lucille Ball, beautiful RKO Radio actress. Midnight blue ribbon creates the saw-tooth band defining the slightly raised crown and narrow brim. Hat can be worn with or without the veiling of midnight blue.

Diet Affects Skin, Hair Condition

By Ida Jean Kain

You may be one of the fortunate whose skin takes on a luminous quality when you are preparing to present the house with an heir. On the other hand, you may be suddenly introduced to skin troubles as vexing as the mosquitoes in a tropical swamp.

But if you were to consult Dr. Robert R. M. McLaughlin, generally conceded to be one of the leading dermatologists in this country, you would be vastly reassured... such conditions as the darkening of the skin, red blotches, blisters, or the appearance of those unaccountable liver spots or tiny veins are only temporary. While a mild skin peeling, which can be furnished by a good paste or lotion formulated for that purpose, is sometimes recommended for the liver spots, most of these annoyances will disappear without outside assistance.

The one condition which must be guarded against—for there is no correcting it—is the breaking of the skin by overdistension. This produces those tiger stripes the doctor calls striae. Usually these appear on the hips, thighs and abdomen, but they may occur on the upper portion of the body. The remedy is a preventive: Wearing a properly fitted girdle and brassiere which support the excess weight and thus protect the skin from overstretching.

Whenever Dr. McLaughlin suggests the use of a cream as a lubricant, it is almost certain to be one containing Vitamin D, for experiments have shown it to have great repair value.

The condition of your skin cannot be dissociated from your general condition and dermatologists are apt to look upon a sluggish skin as a sign of an endocrine deficiency. If the sluggishness is pronounced, a pepper-upper in the form of thyroid extract may be prescribed. Your diet has its effect, not only on your health, but also on your skin. Unless you get your share of Vitamin C in your daily meals, you may notice a tendency of the skin to bruise easily.

Like the skin, the condition of the hair depends upon the general health, but during this period scalp or hair troubles may be aggravated. If the expectant mother is acutely nervous, her hair tends to fall out—sometimes in patches. Serenity and good care seem to be the best antidotes for this.

Don't neglect the several minutes brushing night and morning—that is good exercise for the tiny muscles at the roots of the hair. You might find it advisable to wash your hair somewhat less frequently than customary and in that case Dr. McLaughlin favors the use of a tonic containing a high percentage of alcohol as a substitute cleanser. Your hair should be kept meticulously clean.

If you will make it a rule to give your hair and scalp the excellent care they deserve during these months, there is no reason why your tresses shouldn't be lovelier than ever.

Read Monday's article for special exercises to get back in shape after the arrival of the baby.

Brady Would Prefer Limiting Work To Practice of Preventive Medicine

By Dr. William Brady.

My great secret ambition, to engage in private practice as a prophylactor, that is, to limit my practice to preventive medicine exclusively, having been thwarted by the quaint attitude of the medical profession which does not even now recognize such a field of practice as a legitimate specialty.

Every year or so some reader writes to thank me for something I said in this column which warned or alarmed him or her, with the result that he or she sought proper medical examination or treatment and caught some serious malady in time. On the other hand, just as often I am penalized for having scared somebody into hurrying to his or her doctor for examination only to discover that the trouble is not serious after all.

Now people who express appreciation or thanks for instruction or advice I have given through this service sometimes intimate that they wish they might consult me regularly in private. That is flattering, but from what I know of human nature I doubt there are enough people of that mind to support a specialist who might elect to limit his practice to that field.

People in general need a good deal more education before private practice of prophylaxis or preventive medicine will become feasible. As yet, far too large a portion of the population, even the more intelligent class, prefer to gamble with health, trying this or that remedy or treatment on the suggestion of friend or stranger who "had the same trouble."

A formidable obstacle to the private practice of preventive medicine is the "additional reverence of the medical profession for pathological anatomy, organic disease, the signs of gross structural change produced by disease; and the corresponding contempt for and neglect of pathological physiology, functional disease and the subjective symptoms produced thereby. Necessarily the private prophylactor would concern himself or herself almost wholly with functional disturbances or irregularities, with symptoms.

How many persons who are now subject to pre-diabetes will discover their condition in time to take the necessary steps to prevent development of the disease? Very few, for the reason already indicated—people prefer to gamble with their own health.

POINTS FOR PARENTS

The Clever Girl Today Who Seeks Happiness Puts Accent On Femininity

By Caroline Chatfield.

There are a few subjects about which the problem column editor can speak with assurance. When she's read thousands of letters from young girls all over the land and the vast majority of the letters have had one theme with slight variation, she's pretty well convinced that, current conversation to the contrary, the modern girl cares a lot more about a boy friend than about a career, that even after she's started on the career, she's still got her mind on mere man and won't be content until she finds him; or until she decides he's not to be found.

The world changes and everything in it, except the human heart. The best of the moderns can't talk the heart out of its longing and the cleverest of them can't devise a better way for the girl to find the boy friend than by being a girl, by accenting her femininity rather than by aping his masculinity.

The sweet girl graduates want boy friends and eventually husbands and they have sensed the fact that femininity is their best card. They are playing it with a vengeance and their fond mammals are aiding and abetting them. In a current magazine one college woman mother has put the idea in plain words. She and her husband had made up their minds that the highest happiness for a woman lay in her recognition of the fact that a woman's place in business, profession and marriage was secondary, that she accomplished most to the sum total of human happiness if she admitted it.

So this pair of parents decided to send their daughter to a small conservative co-educational college, rather than to the mother's alma mater, hoping she would be imbued with the idea that no glory in competition with men was equal to the happiness a woman found in playing second fiddle. Daughter went, got the idea and soon got the husband to whom she is very proud to sustain a secondary place.

How did the mother arrive at this decision? By looking around her, she said, and observing that the happiest marriages were those in which wives were not competing with husbands but backing them up. And by her own personal experience in which she was destined to discover she had learned some things in college which had to be unlearned if she were to get the most out of her marriage and contribute the most to it: namely that femininity was sort of shameful and a woman with a college degree should think herself superior to her mate.

The sweet girl graduates are coming back with a vengeance. CAROLINE CHATFIELD.

Colorful Crocheted Rugs Enhance Beauty of Room

So homelike and colorful a crocheted rug will look in your room. And it costs next to nothing to make!

You crochet it from strips of old silk stockings, dyed in colors to harmonize with your decorative scheme.

The size is 27 inches in diameter and the colors are turquoise and gold. But jade green and beige, burgundy and black are attractive combinations, too.

To prepare stockings for crocheting, cut each into a long bias strip, starting at the top and going around and around spirally to the bottom. Thin stockings you cut about three inches wide, heavier ones you cut into narrower strips. Sew strips together and wind into balls and you're ready to begin crocheting.

The entire rug is in single crochet. Begin with three chain stitches, then join with a slip stitch to form a circle. Crochet 6 rows of turquoise, 1 gold, 2 turquoise, 5 gold, 8 turquoise and 4 gold. In adding a new color, sew it to the old.

So that your rug will lie flat be sure to add extra stitches on each row to enlarge circles.

Yes, rugs really make a house! Is anything more charming in living room or hall than a beautiful hooked rug in rich floral design? Is there a boy or man anywhere who wouldn't shout with joy over a hand-made Navaho rug for his own sanctuary?

These handsome rugs are among the many given in our 40-page booklet, NEW IDEAS FOR HAND-MADE RUGS. Has diagrams and directions for braided, hooked, woven and crocheted rugs. Includes Oriental pile, French knot, colonial rag rug—many other pretty, inexpensive kinds.

Send 15c in coins for our booklet, NEW IDEAS FOR HAND-MADE RUGS, to Home Institute, The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

MY DAY: Busy Days In New York

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

HYDE PARK—My little birds have flown this morning out into a strange world all by themselves. I hope they lead happy bird lives and are preserved from the many dangers they must meet, long enough, at least, to give them a few months of whatever constitutes happy bird life.

We sat and listened to the radio last night until the early hours of the morning. Curiously enough, I feel a little the way those young birds felt when they finally flapped off the window sill. The world we are going into is certainly an unknown quantity to all of us. For anyone near you, to be nominated today for the presidency of these United States, is a very serious thing. A first or a third term, is a very serious thing. A heavy responsibility at home for domestic policies, and a heavy responsibility to shape a policy to guide this nation in the peaceful way that our people desire in the troubled world of today.

No one knows what will happen on election day, but during the next few months the two nominees must face the future and tell the people what their experience, their background and their vision makes them see as the mission of this country at home and abroad. Beyond that no one can know. It seems too solemn a thing for me to wish for more at the present time than that the candidates may be given the ability to put their beliefs sincerely before the people. God grant the people will be given the wisdom to choose wisely, not for themselves alone, but with a realization of the weight of their responsibility in the world.

We all went to bed so late it was rather difficult to get up this morning. So far the day has been anything but a normal day, for, after several urgent messages came through from Chicago last night, my husband agreed that, since he could not go himself to the Democratic convention, because of his feeling that he should not be so far away from Washington, he would like me to go. I think he hoped I might be able to give the delegates a personal sense of appreciation he feels for the confidence in him, even though the service required is such a heavy responsibility.

The various changes in arrangements which had been made here for the day, the plans for flying out and returning as rapidly as possible, have made this a very busy morning. I was in New York city all day yesterday, and so am somewhat behind in much of my work, but I hope to be back here early tomorrow morning.

Franklin Jr. is coming up from Washington to go out to Chicago with Mr. C. R. Smith, president of the American Airlines, and myself, and I shall be happy to see Elliott and Ruth, even though it will be for a very brief time.

THE MORTAL STORM

Amelie Agrees to Go and Visit Ulrich von Maberg With Emil

By PHYLLIS BOTTOME.

THE MORTAL STORM.
Accompanying her Communist lover, Hans Bretton, the Austrian sister as he is fleeing from the Nazis, Freya Rohn sees him in the streets of Vienna, and she is shocked to find that he is her stepbrother. Olaf von Rohn, and her aristocratic admirer, Fritz Maberg, who appeared on the scene, had come to help Hans. Hans' death leaves Freya mentally and physically ill and she contemplates suicide until her wise father, a celebrated Jewish scientist, dissuades her. Hans' death is a shock to Freya's younger brother, Rudi, who had worshipped Hans. And Rudi, too, has felt the menace of the Hitler regime, for in school he has been segregated from his classmates because he is Jewish, and has been insulted and ostracized. Freya finds that Rudi's presence at her bedside helps to bring Hans a little more alive. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY:

INSTALLMENT XXXVI.

"Mother! Mother!" Emil gasped, appalled by the ferocity of the clear eyes bent on him. "Why do you say such things to me? And why do you keep starting at my hands as if you hated them?—I was not I who killed Hans—and God knows I have no wish to sell or to humiliate Freya! She needs to marry Fritz if she doesn't want to! He isn't a brute and he does love her. She can't mourn all her life for a dead peasant boy she has known for a few months!"

His mother looked at him more naturally; the terrible blind rage, that had wrapped her like a flame, sank; her hands began to tremble and she said sadly: "I am to blame! I must forget! No! No! It is not your fault! I know that very well, Emil! You are a good boy, trying to help us—time so mad that one suspects even one's helpers! It is not true that I love you less than the others. And I have always trusted you!"

"Don't lie to me," Emil said roughly, "that's worst of all!" They remained silent for a long minute, their eyes fixed on each other, his mother's were full of self-reproach, and Emil's eyes held a yearning stronger than his rage. He could not understand the barrier that stood between him and his mother, and although she understood it, she had never told him what it was. How could she say to him: "Your real father—whose image you are to look at—was a degenerate, a pervert, who nearly murdered me, and made me suffer for four years the torments of the damned! Whenever I look at you I see him—and whenever you touch me I turn cold."

The war had not only hidden her final escape from her husband, it had covered his memory with a merciful cloak of oblivion; so that no one but the von Rohns themselves knew the details of his end, or that Rudolph von Rohn had died, not of wounds heroically acquired in battle, but of a disease that he had merited. "Emil," his mother said gently, "you have much to forgive! Not all that you think is true—but some of it is. Because of something that I have never told you—and for which you are in no way responsible—because of a wound that I have tried to hide—I have been cruelly unjust to you. But far less than you think. I know you for what you are! An honest boy with a brave heart! And in my soul—and with my mind—I love you as much as I love the other children. But you came at a bad time in my life—you remind me of cruel things. When you see me shrink—it is not from you that I am shrinking! When you feel a coldness in me it is a defense against something that is no longer attacking me—but that once—when I was young and defenseless—attacked and overwhelmed me. Perhaps you cannot understand this now—you are too young, and the pain this accident in me has caused you, has been too sharp. But perhaps some day you will understand!"

"I understand now," Emil said with a gentleness that matched her own. "It is, as I have always thought, Mother—my own father was some kind of a mad brute! Olaf had the idea he was a hero—and you never said he wasn't! But it hasn't made much difference to either of us, has it, whether he was a hero or a brute? We had our real father to bring us up—and you!"

"Ah, my dear," said his mother, sitting down on the bed beside him, "you had yourself! Such a good, brave self! I am ashamed I let my selfishness hide you from me. But we will work together now with no more fear of separation. If you think it will go well, to meet Ulrich von Maberg. If they wish to have Freya again for a visit while Fritz is not there—I agree—more you will not ask of me."

Ulrich von Maberg hastened across the Odeonplatz, his heart swelling with a sense of importance and relief. Never for years had his spirits risen so high, or his sense of satisfaction with himself and life, felt so thoroughly justified.

He had been granted an interview with the general in command of Munich, and he was hastening to meet the woman he had always adored and never possessed. His son, whose mere existence Ulrich had always resented, was in prison for murder. Fritz, however, was not going to be executed, but by the goodwill of an omniscient power, assisted by the proper authorities, he was—after a suitable period in a fortress prison—to be let off. What more could a fond father desire, than just such a slight but salutary punishment, inflicted upon a tiresome young person who had always got in the better of him? What Ulrich would have enjoyed in an only son was deep respect, untrammelled by any effort on his own part to live up to it; instead of which he was well aware that his son had no respect for him whatever, and yet presumed to expect his father to behave in an exemplary manner. Hermine, too, through some unplumbed feminine idiosyncrasy, had always had the bad taste to prefer her son to her husband! But when had Ulrich ever been in prison? What life had he ever cut off—except those of countless birds—chamois—and through the proper instrumentalities—fish and fowls?

The Nazis at least took Ulrich at his true value—the general had said: "A son of yours, my dear von Maberg, will naturally receive every consideration!" The Nazis, Ulrich told himself cheerfully, were really going to turn out very well indeed. Dear old Hindenburg would "come across," as the Americans would wittily put it, at the right moment—he and Von Papen—both Junker, with their hearts in the right place, had the interests of their class at heart. They were not likely to back that fellow Hitler without knowing what would lead to? Rather startling, of course, to talk about an Austrian customs officer's son as a "Führer." Still, look at Napoleon, "a Corsican upstart," who became an emperor!

These Social Democrats would be very easy to put in their places; a few policemen would see to that—and Emil would be useful to bring the work-people over. Once you had them feeding out of your hand, and that cold-blooded Catholic Fisch—Bruning—was passing emergency bills that swiftly put the state in von Schleicher's pocket—the good old times might be counted on to come oack—better than ever. Soon you could kick the proletarian riff-raff off the pavements with impunity and see women only where they belonged, at the cooking stove or in your bed!

Not that Ulrich wouldn't have treated Amelie like a queen if he'd had her; but he'd have known, and she'd have known, that he needed—that was the sort of feeling that gave a man real self-respect.

Where was the virtue of not thrashing your wife or your groom if you'd be punished for it—if you did?

Noblesse oblige was good enough for Ulrich von Maberg. Of course von Rohn had always been a skunk. How Amelie could have been such a little fool as to choose him rather than Ulrich remained a mystery.

Still the Trattenbachs, Ulrich's Austrian cousins, were the most old-fashioned stock in existence and they had kept Amelie in such a state of purity and innocence that she'd actually never spoken to a man alone—until her marriage night—the poor little snow-drop.

When he'd seen her next, after her marriage, all the glow and bloom of her 18 years had vanished, she was just a little frozen flower.

Ulrich, however, had always kept a warm corner of his heart for her, and it would have been warmer still if Amelie had ever had the sense to work it.

But once frozen, she had remained frozen for life. You could not count her second marriage to an old Jew!

A mutton-headed old fool who had thrown away a fortune! Still, in spite of her father's having let a younger brother take the greater part of the Roth money to America, Freya would have a solid portion—a thing not to be sneezed at in these hard times. But she'd never been the looker her mother was—hair like ripe corn, falling in a sheet below her knees—long, slender flanks; high small breasts and a color no peach could better! Those startled wide grey eyes too could turn your bones to water!

Ulrich crossed the street to the Cafe Haag, flung wide his shoulders, twirled his moustache, and set his hat a little farther to one side.

Although they had seen each other fairly often, through the years that stretched between them and their youth, they had never met without the clumsy impediments of time—husbands—wives—children—cluttering up their path. This meeting was different, it bore all the marks of an assignation. It was just as if there had been between them what there had never been, and now of course never would be. Still a fellow—even at fifty—has his dreams!

Ulrich swaggered gallantly into the small downstairs room, glanced at the car counter rich with incredible cakes and pastries, and took a table in the upstairs room, far enough away from the herd, to permit of private conversation. Not merely for sentimental reasons either, Fritz' Nazi authority had suggested that one couldn't be too careful nowadays, with everybody stretching their ears to find out the kind of secrets nobody knew.

The rather menacing feeling that even Ulrich had been conscious of, for the last few months, as if a heavy thundercloud were rolling up in the sky, blotting out daylight, passed from his mind. If the clouds did break he knew now that his fields would not be ruined.

It was as if, since his talk this afternoon, Ulrich's personal prospects had been lifted up into a golden ark. The floods could come now; but he and his family would float securely upon the waters.

Meanwhile he could talk with the nearest waitress, about appropriate food. The Cafe Haag had the best cakes in—or probably out of—Munich.

What they couldn't sell fresh, they didn't try to sell at all. Their cook was a genius. Their Crechesmitten, for instance, or their Sachertorte melted before your teeth met in it—and not even Ulrich's morals were lighter than Haag pastry. There was one fault though the cafe had—the chairs were not sufficiently substantial for middle-aged figures. Probably they did not want their customers to be too comfortable, or to sit too long.

What would Amelie look like, coming up the stairs? Would she be kind to him? Would she let those cool grey eyes soften into delicious laughter?

Amelie wasn't such a prude as she looked—and yet wasn't she? He had never dared to try to find out!

Somehow or other he had al-ways wanted to be nice to Amelie. She had a bad deal, and when he held her hand in his, he had never done more than brush it with his lips.

The door at the top of the stairs opened without force, Amelie stood there for a moment looking about her, with the old untruffed considerate dignity. She would always wait—or turn aside—for a servant with a tray—but she looked at the men who brushed too close to her with eyes that matched the Arctic Ocean.

The years had dealt extraordinarily kindly with Amelie, it was enough to make you think she'd been happy with her queer old Jew.

Her skin was still white, her gray eyes clear as spring water, the lovely lines of her head and throat unblurred; and when she smiled across the room at him, Ulrich's heart literally danced in his tough old breast.

"I hope I'm not late," she said gently, subsiding into the chair he held out for her, with the old slow enchanting smile. "My boy Emil told me to be here at five—but there was a good deal to be done, and I did not like to leave Freya until her father was at home."

"Yes, yes!" Ulrich murmured, reverently removing and hanging up her squirrel coat.

It was an old one, but she kept it in good repair, and beneath it, she wore a dress that had come from Vienna. Ulrich knew that at a glance—not even the stoutest Bavarian denied that his lighter neighbors—the Austrians—had a taste it was hard to copy, and impossible for Bavarians to create.

Amelie had wittily taken time to change her dress—black, with a touch of jade-green velvet on the shoulder—and its long simple lines gave her figure the easy slenderness of youth.

Ulrich took a long time eliciting exactly what she wanted to eat. There must be no mistake about so serious a question. The best, Ulrich told himself, would be none too good for his early love. Amelie took his preoccupation charmingly. She was just as serious as if it really mattered a dropped pennig to her which cake she chose, or which savory sandwich led up to it.

She compared flavors with him; she made him describe past meals; their prewar memories rang together like silver chimes; and all the while she tasted nothing—she saw nothing but Freya lying broken—face downwards on her bed.

At last Amelie cut across Ulrich's favorite reminiscences to murmur: "It is marvelous, Ulrich—reliving our old lives, but I must soon go home. I suppose that you wanted to talk to me about this sad affair our children have got themselves mixed up in. You will perhaps give me your advice about it."

Meets Young Man Who Calls All War News Propaganda.

Chap on a trolley car told me the other day he didn't believe the war news he reads in the papers because it's all propaganda.

I asked him if he believed there is such a man as Hitler and that a war is under way in Europe. He admitted that much.

I asked him how he knew there was a war in Europe and he said he'd read about it in the papers and heard about it over the radio. But still he didn't believe the papers—or the radio.

I asked him if he went further than the headlines and noticed that war news is quoted as coming from certain sources—official "communiques." He hadn't bothered about that.

There have been times in the hectic history of Georgia politics when certain inaccuracies, to be mild, crept into the columns of newspapers passionately devoted to one candidate or another. I can recall one occasion in which a too fervid staff writer packed an audience of 5,000 enthusiastic supporters into the Masonic Hall of a Georgia town. Mildly interested, I inquired by telephone about the dimensions of said hall. It measured 35 feet wide and 80 feet deep and the address had been delivered on a hot August afternoon. The notorious Black Hole of Calcutta would have seemed spacious and air-conditioned beside that—yet no casualties from that meeting crept into the mortuary records.

They Try Hard.

Newspapers of the United States seek the truth. Not because they're so darn virtuous or honest but because it's good business.

The Associated Press and other press associations have representatives in all the principal capitals of Europe. They are experienced, able, sound. Some of them know a lot of inside stuff. But knowing something is one thing and getting it on the cables or the wire is something else.

They've got to send what the censors will let them send. They can't always tell the whole truth but they don't send lies—except, quote: "The official communique says—"

It may be—and I think it's not uncommon—that the official communique colors the situation a bit. That applies to both sides. But the correspondents don't do any lying on their own hook. They're too jealous of their reputations and their jobs.

Next time you question a war item look to see who issued it. And take it, if you like, with a grain of salt. But the press associations are doing their best to tell you the truth.

"Passed Off Quietly."

Elections have been held recently in Mexico and in Cuba. The death list—at least the corpses counted—in Mexico ran to about 40, if my memory serves, and Cuba came through with four.

That sounds like the good old times in Georgia. Newspaper editors remember the difficulty they had in persuading country correspondents to eliminate the phrase: "The election passed off quietly" from their telegrams. Telegraph tolls, at so much per word, run into money.

But "passed off quietly" was news not so many years ago. Supporters of candidates took their politics seriously. They were ready to fight to support their convictions—especially along in the shank of the evening when the jugs were empty and it was time to count their votes. Fist fights didn't count. They were as common as pig tracks. But knives and pistols were likely to cause talk—and maybe have a man put out of the church.

The imbrolios brought grave annoyance to newspaper editors intent upon counting votes. A rural correspondent, overcome by excitement, was likely to devote attention to the number of stitches taken in the scalp of Colonel H. Z. Swithers and forget the count of the ballot box. Even a double murder was something of a nuisance on election night, when space was short.

I would be the last to say that Georgia is growing effeminate. Or dissipated. Perhaps it is the insidious and pernicious effect of a better educated new generation. But, whatever the cause, a primary in Georgia nowadays is just a primary and not a holocaust. Old fellows around the grocery store will argue for three months and then vote opposite ways and slip around behind Simpson's We-Fix-It Garage and take a drink together and do no shooting or carving whatsoever.

Oh well, looks like the good old days are gone forever.

Visit From Florian.

My old friend Octavus Roy Cohen has resurrected the handsome and sartorially elegant Florian Slappey in the current Saturday Evening Post.

It may thrill the home-town boosters to know that Florian spends a week outside of his beloved Birmingham nowhere else than in Atlanta's Decatur street.

I make no claim to intimate knowledge of our colored social set, but it seems to me the habitat of the really classy folk with whom Florian mixed and suffered would reside and enjoy life not on Decatur street but on Auburn avenue. But, as I said, I'm no expert.

BOSS OF MANEUVERS is the gentleman above, who bears the imposing name of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. He is, however, called "captain" by the 200 recruits of the reconnaissance company of the first armored regiment of light tanks, stationed at Fort Knox, Ky., for an intensive "tour" of duty.

HENCHMEN OF MARS are prone to strut and boast of victory. Perhaps generals do win victories, but there's one thing sure—a mother never wins in war. Here's one just arrived in Manila from Hong Kong, a refugee with her babe carried Japanese-fashion, their luggage stuffed in the carriage.

PRIZE OF DAVY JONES Whenever a fighting ship is sent to the bottom, somebody has suffered a bad blow—but it's never Davy Jones. He always wins. In this case, it was the Italians who lost when the speedy cruiser Bartolomea Colleoni was sunk over in the Mediterranean sea. (Story on Page 10)

Foresees the Use Of Gas as Nazis' Surprise Weapon

Scornful British rejection of Hitler's surrender-or-die demand has already been forecast too clearly for Germany to doubt the answer.

Hitler foretold it himself in an ironic comment that "no Churchill will be left" if the British prime minister turns down this last "appeal to reason in England"; but that "the people left behind in London" might be of a different mind.

That Hitler expects only a repetition of British defiance is so clearly indicated that the only question left by his speech is when he will let loose his German thunderbolts on England.

That can be expected soon, but it seems probable that the "great assault" will be deferred at least long enough to permit German assessment of reaction of the British public and of the neutral world to the Hitler ultimatum. He coupled with it reiterated assurances that he has no designs on any part of the world other than the European continent and England, still balking his full realization of his continental aims.

Naturally, there was nothing about the Hitler warning to reveal the nature of the attack planned on England. Yet there are broad hints in Hitler's repeated reference to German air power as the essential element of his continental victories.

Surprise Element.

And that again raises a question as to what new form, thus far lacking in this war, the German air attack on England might take to give it a "surprise" element, and to add to its terrors for the British public.

There is no known additional terror weapon to which Germany might now turn except gas bombs. There has been no authentic word of Germany's using gas up to now in this war. Most military observers have believed that the Nazi leadership was actuated by fear of reprisal against German cities and towns in refraining from adding the horrors of gas warfare to demolition and incendiary bomb attacks.

The war news from the onset of the battle in the west has been full of accounts of Nazi "siren" bombs. The shrieking fall of these voice-making as well as death-dealing missiles had a definite place in German war-of-nerves technique.

In France and the Low Countries they helped materially to send millions of civilian refugees staggering to the rear to block and hamper the movement of troops and supply trains.

Why, then, did the Germans withhold the final touch of gas attack?

The probable answer falls into two parts.

Fear of gas-bombing reprisal by the French and British air forces bulked big in the picture.

Gas Not Needed.

There is another probable or possible explanation. The German dash through Dutch, Belgian and French defensive lines was so fast-paced and the whole front in vital sectors moved ahead so quickly that German troops would have been hampered in action by their own gas concentrations. Speed of advance was more important to German strategy than any added terror or death toll which gas attack could have inflicted on the enemy.

That does not necessarily apply in the attack on England. An all-out Nazi air attack, such as Hitler seems to forecast, would make British gas bombing in Germany on any extended scale improbable unless and until the Nazi air assault at home had been repelled.

It may also prove significant that at this season of the year, late July, August and September, there occur periods in England when the air is still and best suited to gas attack. Anyone who has visited London or other big English population centers in that season will recall such days. The smoke of English chimney pots and factory stacks hangs in low clouds for hours when the winds do not blow strongly enough to scatter them. They are the stuff of which London's "pea-souper" fogs are made a little later.

Any such English day will be filled with the added menace of possible German gas-bombing from now on. That may be the final Nazi surprise to destroy British public will to fight on.

Tennessee Lass Wants To Enter U.S. Girls' Navy
